Police leader warning of privatisation threat from budget cuts

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE chairman of Kent Police Federation has made an impassioned plea for the force to remain in public hands, as other counties look to farm out traditional police work to private companies.

Ian Pointon voiced his concerns over the "inherent threat" of privatisation, despite Kent Police so far steering clear of any form of outsourcing.

A spokeswoman for the force said there were no plans to privatise any departments as a result of budget cuts, which amount to £50 million over four years.

But the chairman of the rank-and-file organisation questioned how long it would be until Kent followed the lead of other counties, such as Surrey and West Midlands.

The two forces recently sparked controvery by meeting with delegates from the private sector, including security firms, in a bid to outsource functions previously carried out by police, such as neighbourhood patrols.

The contentious move – which sparked protests from two unions – aims to help fill the gaps in service left by huge budget cuts.

Mr Pointon said he feared the deep cuts in Kent would force the new police and crime commissioner, due to be elected in November, "into the arms of the private sector".

Writing in KoS this week, he said: "Does all this really matter? Not only does it matter, it should be of huge concern to everyone.

"When Sir Robert Peel established policing he chose a specific model; he chose policing by the people for the people; he chose policing by consent; he

'Fewer people creates chance for private sector to step in' modelled it as a civil not a military authority. It's imperative policing continues to be accountable to the public and not to shareholders."

Earlier this month, 400 off-duty officers from Kent were among 35,000 to march in protest through London.

"They didn't march over pay and pensions," said Mr Pointon. "They marched to preserve policing by consent."

This week, frustrations felt by the police boiled over at the Police Federation conference when Home Secretary Theresa May was heckled after attempting to justify the radical policing reforms and deep cuts.

Kent Police are suffering a 20 per cent budget reduction over four years which will result in 500 fewer officers and 1,000 less staff. The need for savings has also pushed the force to look at potential closures of police stations and public enquiry counters in a bid to save £779,000.

Mr Pointon said despite the cuts, so far the force has yet to surrender any of its responsibilities and functions.

"It's business as usual - just with considerably fewer people. This creates a service delivery gap and, in turn, an economic opportunity for the private sector to step in."

"In other police forces

privatisation is already happening. This is all done in the name of keeping police officers on the street.

"That's laudable many will say, streamlining what they term the 'back office' to bolster the frontline.

Last month, Chief Constable of Kent Police Ian Learmonth told this newspaper he was "upbeat" about starting the financial year, due to the force saving more funds than anticipated of between £1m and £1.5m due to the Winsor review, which is looking into police pay.

Mr Learmonth admitted a growing feeling of confidence, but said there was still a "hill to climb".

Since savings plans were put in place, 225 police officer posts have gone and 472 staff.

But he said despite the cuts, there had been a four per cent drop in crime.

"That's 4,000 less victims of crime," he said. "Police officers and staff have been messed about with a reduction in officer numbers and significant reduction in numbers of police staff, but there has still been a reduction in crime.

"They are fed-up, but they still carry out fantastic work."

"I have worked in four different forces and Kent Police is head and shoulders above every other force in the country."

Mr Learmonth said due to the positive position in relation to financial savings, Kent Police had recently been able to recruit 20 new officers, with plans to recruit an additional smaller number after the Olympics.

DEVELOPMENT

Public to get their say on Fort Halstead hotel and care home development plan

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A SWANKY hotel and a care home are among some of the possible developments for the military research centre site at Fort Halstead.

The owner revealed the plans for the Sevenoaks site, currently one of the biggest employers in the area, at several public consultations this week.

The Ministry of Defence confirmed in 2010 it would be closing the Defence Science and Technology Laboratory (DSTL) on the site, leading to the loss of more than 840 jobs.

The move will leave the majority of buildings vacant and owner Armstrong Kent LLP wants to redevelop the land.

It has presented plans to residents for a quality hotel, care home, residential housing, and space for businesses.

The exact make up of the development is yet to be decided as the company says it is keen to get residents' feedback before progressing with any plans.

Fort Halstead is home to ancient

DEVELOPING IDEAS: The owner has big plans for the future of Fort Halstead monument the Old Fort and the building where the first atomic bomb was developed by William Penney.

The owner hopes to develop a visitors' centre which will explore the site's history and reveal some of the work completed there by DSTL.

Scientists at Fort Halstead have worked on many high-profile security threats from organisations like al-Qaeda and also researched how terrorists created the bombs used in London's 2005 attacks.

The total land on the site is more than 300 acres - 100 of which are available to be redeveloped.

The other 200 acres are made up of ancient woodland and grassland and 75 residential homes.

The site is also home to QinetiQ, a private defence technology company, which will remain in operation.

In 2005 Armstrong Kent LLP, a joint venture led by Deutsche Bank's real estate arm RREEF and Hines UK, purchased the site from QinetiQ.

DSTL will be relocating its operations from Fort Halstead to Porton Down and Portsdown West by 2017.

Stephen Roberts, spokesman for Armstrong Kent LLP, said: "If residents oppose the plans in their feedback we will listen to them. We want to accommodate their wishes."

"We have disclosed the plans to QinetiQ and they said they could continue to trade alongside the types of buildings planned."

"Once the community and stakeholders are comfortable we will encourage developers to come forward."

The departure of DSTL will mean a loss of rental income for Armstrong Kent LLP - Mr Roberts said they are open to selling or leasing the site to developers.

Young women drinking their way into the top 10 of league of shame

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HEAVY drinking among women under 21 in our county has got so bad that Kent came seventh in a national league table of the number of penalty tickets dished out by police.

In all, Kent officers dished out nearly 60 on-the-spot £80 fines for women that police believed were too drunk to be in public.

Topping the table by far was Northumbria with 238 fines, followed by Merseyside on 209, and Lancashire at 202.

Kent Police said that in 2011, some 59 penalty notices were issued to women under 21 for being drunk and disorderly.

Kent licensing and night-time economy officer, PC Barbara Murray said: "Kent Police continues to have a high-profile and pro-active approach to policing the night-time economy.

"Kent Police has a very close working relationship with the vast majority of our licensees, who are responsible, comply with the law, and not in the business of selling alcohol to drunk people.

"The neighbourhood teams have a responsibility to police our pubs and clubs and we have dedicated licensing officers in every district whose sole responsibility it is to enforce the Licensing Act 2003, which is the legislation that governs the sale and supply of alcohol.

"Those who do not comply with the law are dealt with robustly by way of the criminal courts and the licensing procedures."

The force said in addition, every district regularly undertakes operations to address drunkenness, anti-social behaviour and disorder which includes providing advice and support, proactive licensing visits, the use of the Ion Track drug trace device, using drug dogs, and intervention early in the evening between 6-9pm to address people who have already had enough to drink.

According to other figures, this time from

BAD FORM:

The county is in the top 10 of a national table of shame for women under the age of 21 receiving on-the-spot fines for being drunk and disorderly health campaign group Balance, the South East including Kent, also came seventh in a table of the number of people under 18 treated for drink-related problems.

The South East saw 810 under 18s receiving some sort of therapy. They are included in the total of 11,910. Top of the list is the North East, followed by the North West and the Midlands.

Balance director Colin Shevills said: "We want to resolve these problems before they get to such an advanced stage and reduce the number of young lives affected by alcohol.

"Drinking too much from an early age is driven by alcohol which is too affordable, too available and too heavily promoted.

"This makes our children vulnerable, increasing the likelihood of them becoming victims of crime, having unprotected sex, saying yes to drugs, and damaging their education and potentially their future."

This week it was announced that Maidstone would get a share of a £1 million cash pot to help tackle the scourge of under-age drinking.

The county town is one of 10 areas across the UK chosen by Baroness Newlove, who is the Government's champion for Active Safer Communities, to receive help to tackle the effects of alcohol abuse.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Once bitten, twice shy as council steers clear of Spanish banking

UNNERVED council chiefs caught out by the Icelandic banking collapse in 2008 have stopped investing millions of pounds in Santander amid fears of a growing financial crisis in Spain.

Kent County Council had listed Santander as an approved bank and was earning interest through overnight deposits, at times of as much as £3 million.

But the authority has decided to temporarily stop putting in more money, due to worries over the Eurozone crisis.

Cabinet member for finance Cllr John Simmonds said the council was not withdrawing permanently, but wanted to establish how ring-fenced the UK bank was from its Spanish parent. He said: "The worry for us is that, in the event of a crisis, client money in the UK could be pulled to Spain."

The nervousness over the situation stems from the Icelandic banking collapse in 2008.

KCC was among a number of authorities that were caught out by the crisis after investing £50m – more than any other public body in the UK – in three Icelandic banks.

The investment represented £32m from its own reserves, £16m from Kent Pension Fund and £1m from Kent Fire and Rescue Authority.

The council had £17m frozen in Landsbanki and £15m in Glitnir as well as £18m in the UK-based Heritable Bank.

Despite the council recovering most of the money, the situation has left finance chiefs shaken.

Santander said client funds are ring-fenced from its parent bank and "money raised in Britain stays in Britain".

But KCC chiefs are remaining cautious. On financial website This Is Money, Santander spoke out over its ownership structure, stressing that it protected UK savers.

"Santander operates under a subsidiary model. This means Santander UK plc is completely autonomous from its Spanish parent company.

"This structure acts as a firewall to prevent problems within one part of the group spreading to other units in the event of financial difficulties.

"Santander also operates a 'firewall' approach to borrowing and lending in the markets it operates in. This means that money raised in the UK stays in the UK."

CAMPAIGN

Ecological factors the key for campaign against airport plans

By Marijke Cox

IT'S been 10 years since the victorious battle against plans to build an airport at Cliffe on the Hoo Peninsula.

But for the campaigners who fought so hard to bury the then-Government's contentious proposal, it could have been just yesterday.

For with two new plans on the table for a Thames Estuary airport uncertainty has been raised yet again for those living in north Kent.

But for the people who campaigned so hard against an airport at Cliffe in 2002-03, they already have the advantage of having come up against this contender before.

They also have the help and support of this newspaper, which has officially joined the ranks of the thousands opposed to the airport.

George Crozer, from Friends of the North Kent Marshes, likened this latest campaign to the 2003 battle, in which he played an instrumental part.

"The argument is exactly the same – this is a precious area that needs to be protected," he said. "We can look at what we did before and take from that."

"The problem is, unlike in 2003, we now have a failing economy. That is in the forefront of people's minds."

"The big thing back then was they couldn't put an airport at Cliffe because of it being a specially protected area. To do so, it would have had to have been in the national interest."

"Now with the economy how it is, it could be argued it is in the national interest."

LAST week, this newspaper declared its support for the campaign against controversial proposals to build an airport in the Thames Estuary. We believe that while there are clearly benefits in terms of jobs, the cost to the county would be so extreme that it would change Kent from a green and pleasant land to a sprawling mass of concrete and traffic.

NO Estuary Airport

"Those who want the airport see it as a panacea for the jobs problem. There would be a few jobs for local people, yes, but most would be for people from out of the area who already have the skills required."

"Also, the jobs wouldn't be created for 10 or 15 years."

The last time the idea of an estuary airport reared its head was in 2002, when the then-Labour Government identified a site at Cliffe as the preferred site for an airport for London.

Campaigners launched a major fight and in December, 2003, ministers dismissed the proposal, citing overwhelming environmental reasons.

The latest plans involve the construction of an international hub on Grain by Lord Foster, or on reclaimed land in the estuary, promoted by Boris Johnson – the so-called Boris Island. Both would cost £50bn-£70bn.

Mr Crozer said it was vital the ecological importance of the site was the primary basis for the plans to be overturned.

"One of the reasons the plans could be turned down is if it's too costly, but really it needs to be about the fact this is an important ecological site."

"That is the only way people will stop coming back to the estuary with plans for an airport."

"[The area has] been looked at in 1940, in 1943, in the 1950s and then in 2003. The only way we can stop this uncertainty is for the Government to realise how important this site is ecologically."

The site is covered by five Special Protection Areas (SPA). This means it has been identified as of international importance for the breeding, feeding, wintering or migration of rare and vulnerable species of birds. This is a European designated site, protected under EU law.

The estuary is known worldwide for the thousands of migratory birds flying between Siberia and west Africa and fears have been raised over risk of bird strike to aircraft.

A headquarters, the same as that created in 2003, is being re-launched next to Mr Crozer's home in High Halstow.

It is expected to become the nerve centre of the campaign.

Leader Cllr Rodney Chambers said the overwhelming environmental reasons given for the rejection of Cliffe airport back then hold true for all the Thames Estuary alternatives.

He added: "I urge your readers to help ground the idea of an airport on or near the Thames Estuary."

BOLD STEPS

Alternative aviation solutions

COUNTY Hall chiefs have released an ambitious aviation plan which looks to divert the focus away from the Thames Estuary.

In a new document called Bold Steps for Aviation, Kent County Council sets out recommendations to help the UK meet its aviation capacity needs by looking at regional airports and improved rail connectivity.

The report strongly recommends that "any proposals for the Thames Estuary airport are not progressed further".

"The authority does not consider this a viable solution and remains opposed to any airport within this location," said KCC.

The recommendations include:

■ Construction of an airside high-speed rail link connecting Gatwick and Heathrow.

■ Improved connectivity of other regional airports, such as Manston and Lydd, with Gatwick and Heathrow.

■ Further development of Manston and other existing regional airports in the South East, as well as those with good connections to London, such as Birmingham.

■ Capacity growth at Gatwick through the addition of a second runway after 2019.

KCC said: "Rather than depending on an estuary airport that will take years to develop and may not even succeed, better use of our existing airports now will ensure the UK retains its premier position as a hub airport."

Bold Steps for Aviation cites KCC's concerns over proposals for a Thames estuary airport, in particular the cost of such a venture, the impact on communities living within the Medway area, the damage to the environment, and the significant risk issues associated with locating an airport in the estuary.

ARTS

A lifetime of memories on board unique boat heading to Kent coast

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A SPECIAL yacht sailing its way to Kent and built from pieces of wood donated by people from across the UK can be seen up close when it moors at Margate in July.

The builders wanted a vessel that really meant something to Brits, so in their appeal for donated wood they stipulated they didn't just want any old pieces – it had to be significant to the donor.

The result is an astonishing boat made from the memories of all that helped out.

The appeal was launched two years ago, and now finally the Collective Spirit has now been launched.

It should be on view from several Kent towns during its journey around the south coast, and is on course to be off Dover on July 9-10; Folkestone on July 10; Ramsgate on July 10-12; stopping at Margate on July 13-16; and then can be seen on July 18 off Gravesend.

Picture: TOBY ADAMSON

SPIRIT OF ADVENTURE:

The crew, Lone Twin and the build team aboard Collective Spirit for the first time before setting sail for its trip to celebrate the Games

During the stop at Margate, one of only five planned, there will be three days of activity bringing together key cultural organisations in the town.

There is to be an evening of community-based celebrations including a Late Night Live at the Turner Contemporary to mark the boat's arrival.

Other activities include a late-night outdoor bicycle cinema also at the Turner Contemporary; community processions meeting at the harbour to exchange gifts with the boat; and work by new writers being performed at the Theatre Royal Margate, plus a performance of a new choral commission by Megan Henwood.

The 30ft sailing boat's journey is in celebration of the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games. It was created by arts company Lone Twin, and is one of 12 Artist Taking the Lead projects, which is the UK Arts Council's flagship project for the London 2012 Cultural Olympiad.

Collective Spirit was created using around 1,200 donations, including a tiny piece of the Mary Rose, another from HMS Victory which was built in Chatham, a sliver of Jimi Hendrix's guitar, a salad server in the shape of a spanner, a plank from the new London 2012 Velodrome, a piece of the Brighton Pier, several hockey sticks, and a Victorian policeman's truncheon.

Other donations included crates used to transport British securities like gold to Canada during World War Two, and a hairbrush used by a make-up artist at Pinewood Studios in the 1960s.

Gary Whelan of Lone Twin said: "We are marking thousands of lives and built something quite extraordinary out of them. It is something sociable – this is all about people."

Sidcup street goes Dutch to rid their homes of damp

Lisa Smith and neighbour, Peter Roberts

AFTER completely modernising her home in Sidcup, Lisa Smith did not want to ruin her hard work by fitting a damp proof course.

Her neighbour Peter recommended Holland Damp Proofing and Lisa, 55, gave them a call. "We didn't want to start hacking into walls or replastering and that's the beauty of Holland Damp Proofing – it doesn't damage anything internally," said Lisa.

"It's great that there are no chemicals involved because that means it is environmentally friendly and I knew there would be no harmful effect on my pets."

Lisa's neighbour Peter Roberts, 75, who had the damp proof course installed in April 2011 said: "All the damp has disappeared - I would give them 11 out of 10."

Your questions answered by the UK's leading non-chemical damp proofing company

What are the signs of damp?

The signs of damp in your home can come and go whether you have drought, floods or May sunshine – but the damp will still be there. Tell-tale signs to look for are a musty smell, stained or peeling wallpaper, bubbling paint, rust marks around nails on skirting boards and mould growth on walls.

Why is it important to treat damp?

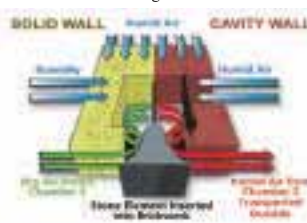

It's easy to ignore the signs of damp, but if left untreated it can get much worse, damaging the very fabric of your home and posing serious health risks, especially for those with medical conditions such as asthma or rheumatism.

What can I do about it?

There are many types of damp problems so it's best to leave it to the professionals. You can start by calling Holland Damp Proofing. One of our specialists will give you honest advice and if we think our system is suitable to solve your damp problem we will arrange a free visit. Since we came to the UK in 1999 we have helped thousands of people rid their homes of damp.

How the Damp Proof System works?

The system was originally developed in The Netherlands where 60% of homes are built below sea level – so it's got a long and successful history. The idea is simple: draw out the moisture and the damp will disappear. This involves a series of small, damp-regulating bricks which neatly fit into the external walls of your home, close to the ground. These cleverly allow air to flow in and out of the brick chambers letting the wall breathe.

Is it suitable for my home?

It doesn't matter whether you have a Victorian terrace, period property, a church...or even a castle...the system is suitable for virtually all types of property including use on cavity, solid, stone and brick walls.

How is it installed?

The system is installed from the outside and is usually fitted in one to two days. The work is done by our own engineers (no subcontractors) who are based at our regional branches throughout the UK.

What are the advantages over chemical damp proofing?

The system is a great alternative to chemical damp proofing which can be messy and involve hacking off plaster work on walls inside your home – a big upheaval! Over time chemical barriers will eventually break down... and the damp will come back. Equally as important there is no danger of breathing in any toxic chemicals with the Holland Damp Proof System®.

How much does it cost?

The cost of installing the Holland Damp Proof System® is similar to chemical damp proofing, but as there will be no mess, no replastering and no repeat treatments you will save money in the long term. And with our 20-year guarantee, you will also have total peace of mind.

High Sheriff tells mums to stop letting kids drop fast food litter on country roads

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE county needs to clean up its act if the growing problem of litter is not to ruin the opportunity for the county to showcase itself during the Olympic Games.

That's the view of the county's High Sheriff, Michael Bax, who said some mums are to blame letting their kids toss fast-food wrappers out of car windows, and he is calling on every Kent resident to have some "pride" in their home.

He said: "The litter on Kent's rural roads is becoming a negative and noticeably regular topic of conversation.

"From June onwards, Kent will be one of the gateways to the Olympics and the county owes it to itself to make a serious effort to clean up its act."

Mr Bax is also senior partner at chartered surveyors BTF Partnership. He acts for landowners, farmers and rural estates across the county.

He realises litter may not be top of the agenda for many people, but he added: "There are plenty of more important things to worry about, but as far as I am concerned, the county's roads are in a fair old pickle, and are as bad as they have been for a long time.

"The reason I feel it is appropriate to bring this up now is because we have the run in to the Olympics with Kent being the gateway to the Games, and it would be a pity if the county doesn't look good.

"I am told pretty much all the accommodation has been booked and a lot of that is in rural areas, and it is those areas that are pretty bad.

"The second thing is Natural England has published their Countryside Code and it was that which set me on this trail.

"When I was a kid the country code was widely marketed; things like shut gates, don't start fires and pick up litter, all that sort of thing.

"When I was young, we all knew it. Nowadays, I think it has disappeared, which is why Natural England has republished it. I think this is a great time to clean up and learn the countryside code again."

Mr Bax's family can trace its roots back some 600 years in Kent and has been farming for all but 200 years of that time.

He said: "I think people's morale will be better if they are not living in a sordid environment.

"I am thinking of various country lanes that I know where every time one goes back, there are new McDonald's cartons and mugs along the side of the road.

"It is quite clear this is a minority of the population – it is one or two mums who go to McDonald's for burgers and so on, and before they get home, they say to their kids 'chuck the kit out of the window'."

Mr Bax, from Shadoxhurst, said: "I think there needs to be a change in people's mindset when it comes to leaving rubbish behind. It would be nice if we could all have a bit more pride in our county. This small minority are making a terrible mess. "We need to enter into the spirit of keeping Kent clean.

KEEP KENT TIDY: Michael Bax wants people to look after the Kent countryside

"Not only will picking up litter keep Kent looking beautiful but it will also help remove a dangerous hazard to farm animals and wildlife.

"As High Sheriff of Kent, can I please ask the county to practice these basic principles at every level in the community, both young and old.

"Kent is a wonderful county – let's reverse the bad habits of the minority and show our county to the world."

COUNTY COUNCIL

Case of mistaken identity saw KCC worker paid council chief's expenses

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

RED-FACED Kent County Council chiefs have admitted an embarrassing error which saw a maintenance fitter with the same name as leader Cllr Paul Carter (inset) paid £20,000 in allowance payments.

The mistake, which involved a mix-up with bank details, saw a KCC employee at Aylesford Commercial Services Depot – also called Paul Carter – paid the Tory chief's allowance in addition to his own salary for several months in 2007.

A KCC spokeswoman said as soon as the error was discovered action was taken to reclaim the money.

But at this point the other Paul Carter had left the country and is now believed to be in Eastern Europe. Only £768.99 was recovered.

"Some money was repaid, but a total of £20,629.01 was not," the spokeswoman said.

"The member of staff resigned and then left the country and we have not been able to trace them for repayment.

"The cost of finding this person would be too expensive to the taxpayer, and we have had to reluctantly write the debt off.

"Clearly, if he were to be found in the UK, we would look at reclaiming the outstanding sum."

The payments were made to the maintenance man, who was then aged 54, from September, 2007, to March, 2008.

EDUCATION

Huge bill predicted as KCC faces shortfall of 10,000 school places

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

EDUCATION chiefs have admitted needing thousands of additional school places – the equivalent of 18 new primaries and two new secondaries in just four years.

In a new report, Kent County Council said forecasts suggest a significant rise of more than 10,000 primary school-aged pupils in the next few years.

And while the secondary-aged population looks set to reduce between now and 2015, numbers will then start to rise, peaking at around 83,000 by 2021.

KCC has frequently been accused by education experts and parents of failing to plan ahead in terms of school places.

Education expert Peter Read of Kent Independent Education Advice said while some of the principles in the report should be applauded, the matter should have been addressed some years ago.

"If this had come in 2009, there would have been money there, but KCC denied there was a problem," he said.

"KCC now has to try and find the finance."

In its new Commissioning Plan for Education Provision, which looks at predicted birth rates and new housing over the next few years, the council sets out an aim to make sure there is a surplus of places of at least five per cent.

But Mr Read warned that this five per cent would cover the whole county, rather than districts, such as Tunbridge Wells, Gravesend and Thanet, which struggle with primary provision.

He added: "KCC is not allowed to build new schools; only new academies and free schools can be built.

"One example is the Tiger free school which is being built on the grounds of the half empty New Line Learning Academy in Maidstone.

"This doesn't help those on the other side of Maidstone where there is actually a problem with provision."

In its new plan, KCC vows to increase the percentage of parents securing their preferred schools, after figures last month showed 800 pupils were denied places at their three preferred primary schools for September, 2012, with the highest numbers in Maidstone, Tunbridge Wells, Sevenoaks and Thanet.

Cabinet member for education Cllr Mike Whiting said KCC wants to make sure there are enough high-quality places available for children and young people by expanding good schools, securing investment in new ones, and providing additional places in the areas where there is growth in numbers.

"This document attempts to capture all known births and housing developments and development proposals, by district, to forecast how many early years places, primary places and secondary places we will need from 2012 to 2017," he said.

"It looks at each district separately, so that we can plan local school places where new houses are being built, and not by simply enlarging a school on the other side of the borough.

"The plan is a draft and we are actively seeking feedback from our district council colleagues, headteachers, GPs, housebuilders, parish and town councils and others.

"It will be reviewed every six months so that forecasts can be amended to take into account new housing proposals as they come forward."

KCC said the plan was more than just "number crunching" and that it set out the council's ambition for Kent to be one of the best places for children and young people to grow up, learn, develop and achieve.

The authority is also looking to have at least 85 per cent of primary and secondary schools, and all special schools, to be judged as good or better.

Cllr Whiting said: "Good and outstanding schools are the basis of strong communities and a strong local economy.

"Our aim is to make sure there is a good choice of local schools for parents and that we increase the number of parents who are satisfied with the school places offered for their child.

"Securing good quality school places in every community is essential for every young person to have the best start in life."

To view the draft Commissioning Plan for Education, and submit comments by June 19 visit www.kent.gov.uk/EducationProvision.

Feedback from this consultation will contribute towards the final version of the plan, which will be published in the autumn.

A PIECE OF EDEN: Founder of the Eden Project Tim Smit met children at Colliers Green School to encourage them to join in the Big Jubilee Lunch

COMMUNITY

Eden Project boss journeys home and serves up an invite to 'create memories' at the Big Jubilee Lunch

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

TIM Smit – the founder of Cornwall's famous Eden Project – returned to Kent last week to talk to schoolchildren about next month's the Big Jubilee Lunch.

From the age of 13-18 Mr Smit lived in Cranbrook, boarding at Cornwallis House, Cranbrook School, while his parents were away in Turkey and Nigeria.

He said: "I spent some very happy years at the school, it was just becoming co-educational and so it was a very exciting time."

By the age of 16 he developed a taste for music and formed the rock, blues and progressive club, eventually leaving Kent to form a rock band at Durham University.

Mr Smit went on to spend 10 years in the music business as a songwriter and a producer in both rock and opera.

But the life of a rock star wasn't enough. One day he was in a chauffeured limo, the song he produced Midnight Blue was at number one in the French charts, and yet he still didn't feel complete.

He said: "I was really depressed. I thought I would be really excited, but this was not what I was meant to do."

He moved to Cornwall and discovered and restored the Lost Gardens of Heligan before creating the Eden Project.

The Eden Project is an £80 million initiative which is made up of two sets of domes. One emulates a Mediterranean environment and one a tropical environment.

The attraction aims to educate people about science and the environment and Mr Smit says it has contributed more than £1 billion to the Cornish economy.

He said: "I feel complete doing what I do now. I am doing what feels significant."

In January, 2011, Mr Smit was appointed an honorary Knight Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (KBE) by the Queen for recognition of his services to the public's engagement with science. But he is striving to achieve more and wants the Big Lunch on June 3 to be a national day of celebration.

He said: "As soon as you achieve one thing you almost feel you can achieve something bigger."

The Big Lunch is an initiative from the Eden Project where neighbours are encouraged to get together for a day of friendship, community and fun. His plan is for the lunch to be "the English Thanksgiving".

Mr Smit spent time planting seeds and making bunting with 80 children aged five to 11 at Colliers Green School in Cranbrook.

He said: "I told the children at Colliers School the country is a really nice place, not a horrible one. We have to make a Churchill salute – this is not broken Britain, it's just slightly bruised."

"It was a complete coincidence I ended up back in Cranbrook for the event – but it was a lovely one. It's been great to be back in Kent today, hearing all about the Big Jubilee Lunches being planned."

Last year more than two million people took part in the lunch and this year the organisers are expecting even more as it falls on the same weekend as the Queen's Diamond Jubilee celebrations.

Mr Smit added: "This year we are creating memories for our children so I encourage everyone in Kent to get together in their communities and have a Big Jubilee Lunch on June 3."

"Just bother because it will create memories until the day you die."

Advertiser's Announcement

Give your child a head start! Help your child prepare for secondary school now.

Parents can give their child a head start, and help them to prepare for secondary school next year by arranging for them to attend a free 'Secondary School Taster Day'.

The Bishop of Rochester Academy is holding a 'Secondary Taster Day' on Wednesday 13th June at East Campus in Magpie Hall Road, Chatham, so that pupils currently in Year 5 of Primary school can have a taste of Secondary school life before they transfer in September next year - 2013.

The 'Taster Day' is provided FREE by the Academy and pupils currently in Year 5 in any of the Primary schools in Medway can attend.

"Every child matters." Said Colin Boxall, the Bishop of Rochester Academy's new Principal. "All Year 5's will be welcome. Every child who wants a place on our 'Taster Day' will have one." he said.

"Transferring from primary school to secondary school can be a very worrying time for children." said Pete Sears, Head of Lower School at the Bishop of Rochester Academy. "By providing them with the opportunity to visit in advance and experience for themselves what its like to be at secondary school, we aim to make the transfer much easier for them. They will know what to expect and will be a lot less anxious about it." he said.

At primary school children generally have the same teacher and stay in the same classroom for all their lessons, but in secondary school they will have different teachers for each subject and will move around the school to be taught in specialist rooms. For example, at the Bishop of Rochester Academy they will go to the Modern Foreign Languages Block to be taught French, Spanish or German by specialist teachers who are all fluent speakers of the language. They will go to the specialist Science Laboratories for their Science lessons, the Food Technology rooms for their cookery lessons, and the Drama Studio for their Drama lessons, etc. - all taught by experienced subject-specialist teachers.

During the 'Taster Day' at the Bishop of Rochester Academy there will be exciting sample secondary lessons provided by the specialist teachers in each of the Subject-Departments in the Academy - such as Science, Music Technology, Design & Technology, Textiles, Food Technology, ICT, Drama, Sports, etc. They will meet and talk with the specialist teachers, and will be able to take home anything they have made during their 'Taster Lessons'.

Another difference from primary school is the size - both the size of the school building, and the number of students, which will be much more than they are used to. The Bishop of Rochester Academy has a large school site and around 1,200 students plus a Sixth Form. Going to different rooms for their Taster Lessons will help children to get used to moving around a large school environment.

The 'Taster Day' will also provide children with an important opportunity to meet and make friends with other local children - children from other local primary schools who may be their future classmates when they start at secondary school. Children from different primary schools will all sit together to have lunch in the Academy's 'Magpie Hall Cafe', where hot and cold meals are prepared on the premises by the Academy's Catering staff. "And I will make sure that all of the children have a healthy and nutritious lunch." said Mrs Daffy, the Academy's Catering Manager.

One of the Bishop of Rochester Academy's 'Specialisms' is Music, and the Academy has a flourishing Music Department which is very popular with all students, across all Year-groups. To build on previous successes and develop music-

"Children will not need to have past music experience or a proven musical ability to apply for a Music Scholarship' place, just a keen interest in music - so any child may apply." said Karen Fowler, the Academy's Musical Director - who is co-ordinating these NEW 'Music Scholarships'.

This is a particularly exciting time to join the Bishop of Rochester Academy as there is a £23 Million building programme underway, which will result in a stunning new Academy building with state-of-the-art facilities. The NEW building is due for completion next Spring (2013), so students joining the Academy this September will be amongst the first to making in the Academy further, the Bishop of Rochester Academy is introducing 'Music Scholarships' from September. 25 'Music Scholarship' places will be available to students joining the Academy in Year 7 from this September. Music Scholarship students will benefit from FREE Music lessons (instrumental, Music Technology or singing lessons), FREE instrument loan, FREE music trips and will be involved in public and A c a d e m y - b a s e d performances. They may also have FREE uniform.

Still time to join mass bike ride at opening of 'world-class' cycle park

By Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

A MASS bike ride will mark the official opening of Europe's largest cycling park next week.

Thousands of people are expected to take part in the event on Sunday, May 27, at the 43-hectare Cyclopark, near Gravesend, which has a world-class cycling and running track, a championship-standard mountain bike track, and an international-level BMX track.

There is still time to register for free to take part in the mass cycle ride organised by Sky Ride, by visiting www.goskyride.com/SkyRideCity.

The ride starts at 10am, but is not the only thing to take place at the park.

Other attractions on the day include the Kent School Games cycling final, the South Region BMX competition featuring more than 400 riders, and the Gravesend Cyclopark 10K race.

Kent County Council cabinet member for environment, highways and waste Cllr Bryan Sweetland, said: "Cyclopark is a fantastic new attraction for Kent that will attract hundreds of thousands of people; from dedicated cyclists and athletes to families looking for a great day out.

"By careful development of the site we have been able to include a wide range of exciting and state of the art facilities.

"In addition to the world-class track, mountain bike and BMX cycling facilities, we also have a skate park that was designed and built by well-known specialists, a football/basketball pitch area, a children's adventure playground, and an attractive café providing great refreshments.

"There are few facilities of this standard in the country. Opening before the Olympics, we expect Cyclopark will draw thousands of visitors, bringing tourists and their cash, to help regenerate this part of Kent."

Heartbreaking theft as crooks steal memorial plaques from cemetery

By Chris Murphy

CALLOUS metal thieves have struck again – this time by stripping brass name plaques from a cemetery.

They tore the 150 plates from a large memorial wall, leaving the Tonbridge Council's cemeteries office staff with the sad task of getting in touch with the families affected to tell them of the heartbreaking theft.

Now officers from Kent Police are appealing for witnesses to come forward and help them track down the crooks.

The plaques, worth around £80 each, were reported stolen on May 11 from the cemetery in Welland Road, Tonbridge.

Neighbourhood Inspector Nick Sparkes said: "Stealing plaques produced by the bereaved in memory of loved ones is heartless, to say the least.

"I've no doubt they were taken for their scrap metal value, without any thought for the impact this will have on the family of the deceased. I urge anyone who is offered plaques for sale, or who thinks they know who is involved, to contact us immediately."

Kent Police recently held a series of meetings with scrap metal merchants to see how metal thieves could be deterred.

Meanwhile, lead was stolen from the Chatham Naval Memorial earlier this month.

Chief Insp Richard Cherry said at the time: "It's really disappointing metal thieves would stoop so low."

Plaques were recently targeted at Medway Crematorium, and a brass plaque was taken from the Victoria Cross memorial grove in Dunorlan Park, Tunbridge Wells.

Steve Humphrey, the council's director of planning, transport and leisure, added: "We would like to extend our deep regret and sympathy to the families and friends of those remembered by the plaques.

"The council keeps the cemetery as secure as possible but it is a public place that should be respected. We will continue to work with the police as they appeal for witnesses to this heartless crime."

Anyone who can help trace the thieves is asked to contact the Tonbridge and Malling neighbourhood policing team on 101, quoting 11-0682, or call Kent Crimestoppers anonymously on 0800 555 111.

Also, if anyone believes they might be a victim of the cemetery theft, they are asked to contact the Tonbridge Cemetery Office, on 01732 876357.

Conmen cheated vulnerable and elderly out of £100,000

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

A PAIR of fraudsters who preyed on elderly and vulnerable people, scamming them out of more than £100,000 have been jailed for a total of nine years.

Oscar Yeboah (pictured) and Jonathan Mintah deliberately picked victims – mostly in their 80s and 90s – to lure into their elaborate scam.

Officers finally arrested them after a probe in 27 linked offences across Kent and London.

Investigating officers found victims were first targeted by phone with the caller claiming to work for either the Metropolitan Police or a fraud investigation team of a bank. The caller would tell them they had been the subject of fraud on their bank account and that a police officer would visit them.

Yeboah or Mintah would then control personal visits. They used associates in order that they were not seen themselves.

The victims would be told to place their debit card, PIN and bank statements into a sealed envelope for the person calling on the victims to take away as evidence.

Thousands of pounds would then be stolen from the accounts through the debit cards which directly benefited both Yeboah and Mintah.

During the frauds, a luxury flat in a Thames Riverside development favoured by Premier League footballers and music stars, was rented by Yeboah and used by the pair, and numerous short-term rentals of prestige vehicles were made by Yeboah.

The victims, who ranged from 61 to 98 years old, lost sums of up to £13,000. Officers found that on one occasion, £45,000 from a savings account had been targeted and moved in preparation for withdrawal.

However, banking security measures identified the potential fraud and stopped the transaction.

A proactive campaign by detectives enlisted the help of one of the victims – a 91-year-old Maidstone woman. She was so incensed that she had been tricked out of more than £7,000 she spoke out to warn others about what had happened.

Yeboah, 27, of Woodford Avenue, Ilford, pleaded guilty in November at Maidstone Crown Court to conspiracy to commit fraud through false representation between December, 2010, and March, 2011. He was sentenced to four years' imprisonment.

Mintah, 26, of Atherton Road, Forest Gate, London pleaded guilty in April to conspiracy to commit fraud through false representation between December, 2010, and March, 2011. He was been jailed for five years.

Attacker groomed young girl over web before sex assaults

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A PROLIFIC sex offender has been locked up for four years after grooming and sexually assaulting a schoolgirl.

Daniel Joslin, 30, of Station Road East, Canterbury, admitted two counts of sexual grooming, breaching a sexual prevention order, engaging in sexual activity with a child and four counts of distributing indecent images of children.

The court heard how Joslin attempted to befriend a 15-year-old girl in Larkfield on social networking sites.

This later escalated into sexual activity with the victim and ended when he emailed her more than 100 photos and films depicting images of child abuse.

Joslin had attempted to use many false names in order to evade identification, but the net closed around him when the victim's mother reported the matter to police and officers traced his computer and social networking accounts.

Investigating officer Det Con Michael Brown said: "Joslin is a prolific offender who has groomed and assaulted a vulnerable child.

"He has a history of avoiding the consequences of his actions and I am pleased we have been able to bring him to justice.

"This was a meticulous investigation carried out by the Child Exploitation Investigation Team, which was able to link Joslin to the various false identities he used to carry out his offences.

"This is an example of the determination of Kent Police to seek out those who look to harm children, regardless of the methods used by offenders to avoid capture."

In addition to the custodial sentence, Joslin was also handed an extended licence of five years, once released from prison, while a Sexual Offences Prevention Order will restrict his access to children and the internet.

Club's hopes for institute to train up above par golfers

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE UK's first golfing institute, designed to cater for the great, the good, and the eager to learn, could be built in the county after a leading club teamed up with the sport's European Tour.

The London Golf Club, in Ash, near Brands Hatch, has teamed up with the organisation to submit plans to local authorities for the construction of a new European Tour Performance Institute.

It would include a covered driving range and innovative nine-hole academy course.

The club already has 36-holes of championship golf and plans for a 130-bedroom luxury five-star hotel and spa previously agreed by the local authority.

Managers said that this, along with the new facilities, will encapsulate the club's vision of becoming a world-class destination primed for hosting major golfing events.

LEARNING: The golfing institute is much-anticipated by the club

The course hosted the 2008 and 2009 European Open and this weekend welcomes a host of big names to the Golf Live exhibition.

The event features the likes of players Colin Montgomery, Gary Player and Paul Casey, along with celebrities including Chris Evans, Jodie Kidd, Formula One driver Heikki Kovalainen and DJ Spooky.

And David MacLaren, director of property and venue development at The European Tour, added: "We recently opened the world's first European Tour Performance Institute at Terre Blanche in Provence, also a European Tour Destination, and I am confident that creation of a state of the art practice and learning facility at London Golf Club will be of great benefit to club members, visitors and the wider community."

Charity calls on public's help as homeless numbers rise

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A HOMELESSNESS charity is urging the public get in contact if they see someone sleeping on the streets, after figures revealed a 23 per cent rise in rough sleepers.

Homeless charity Porchlight's Don't Just Walk Past – Tell Us campaign, asks people to call or go online to help it locate street sleepers.

Porchlight staff already spend the early hours looking for people sleeping rough, but hope the extra help from the public will mean they can find even more vulnerable people.

When the public use the system they will be asked for the location and appearance of the person, allowing the charity to find and invite them to a day centre to discuss their needs.

They will then decide whether they would be best in supported accommodation or somewhere more independent.

In February the Department for Communities and Local

TOUGH TIMES: Rough sleeping has risen by some 23 per cent

Government published figures that revealed a 23 per cent rise in rough sleeping in the last year across England.

Porchlight chief executive Mike Barrett said: "The huge increase in people finding themselves in a desperate situation is very sad, but not a shock. The financial pressures affecting both the individuals themselves and the organisations that are there to help are finally coming to fruition."

Simon is now staying at one of Porchlight's supported accommodation projects after making contact with the charity's rough sleeper team.

He said: "Without Porchlight I would have ended up being stuck on the streets."

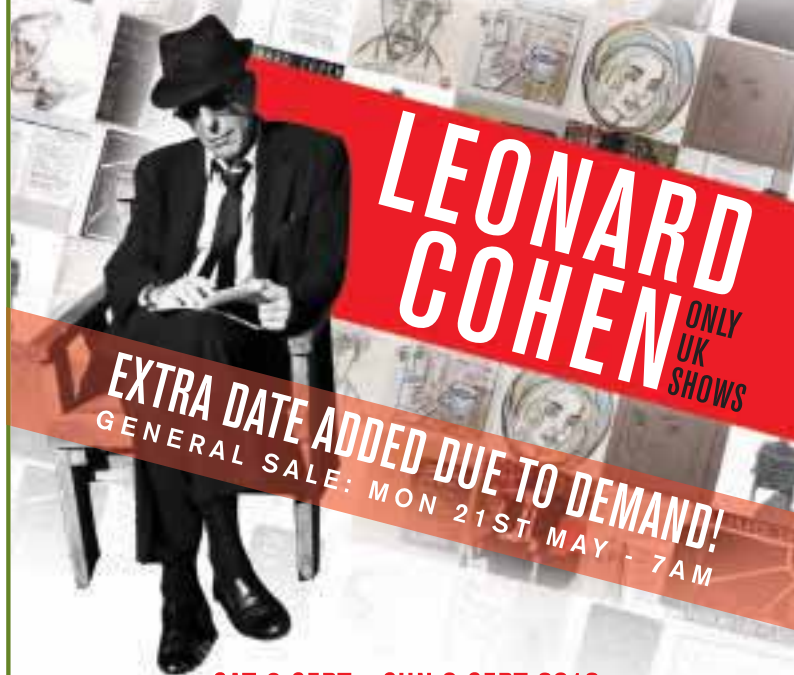

"It's that easy for someone to end up in that situation and it can all happen so fast. A lot of people think that homeless people are a certain kind of person but they're not. It really can happen to anyone."

Porchlight has supported accommodation services in Ashford, Canterbury, Dover, Margate, Ramsgate and Tonbridge as well as a dedicated rough sleeper team.

To report a rough sleeper call 0800 567 76 99 or visit www.porchlight.org.uk/tellus.

War Horse star Joey rides in and thrills the crowds

By James Benjamin

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE four-legged star of film director Steven Spielberg's critically acclaimed epic, War Horse, galloped into the county for a special guest appearance last week.

The horse which portrayed Joey in the Disney smash hit rode in to impress the crowds outside a supermarket in a PR stunt to promote the film's re-release on DVD.

War Horse, based on the best-selling book by Michael Morpurgo, charts the exploits of a horse on the battlefields of World War One.

A number of horses were used to portray the main star – Joey – and one was saddled up to dazzle shoppers outside of Sainsbury's in Otford Road.

It posed for pictures with fans and even signed with his hoof for a young admirer.

The film grossed more than £100 million around the world and received six Academy Award nominations.

Hosepipe ban will continue despite wettest-ever April

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

DESPITE the wettest April since records began, and Bewl Water rising to 74 per cent full, the hosepipe ban remains in place for the long term.

After the recent downpours some counties have had their drought status lifted, but the South East remains too dry and the ban, introduced by five Kent water companies, remains in place.

The hosepipe ban was put in place on April 5, to restrict water use after two years of low winter rainfall.

A spokesman for Southern Water said: "Our resources are still recovering from two years of prolonged dry weather and we still need more rain to replenish the underground stocks."

"The restrictions are about long-term planning and we need to consider the possibility of, and prepare for, a third dry winter which could lead to restrictions next summer."

Southern Water's Bewl Wa-

ON THE RISE: Bewl Water

ter in Lamberhurst has seen levels rise by 30 per cent since February, while South East Water's Ardingly reservoir in West Sussex is now 86 per cent full.

A South East Water spokesman said: "The temporary use ban will remain in place until we are confident water resources have returned to levels that ensure we have enough water to meet demands this summer and in 2013."

"The recent rainfall has shown some very early signs of recovery in the underground chalk aquifers, but we have yet to see any such signs in our deeper sandstone aquifers."

The Environment Agency's drought update shows the wettest April on record and continuing rainfall in May has significantly increased river and reservoir levels, allowing the drought status to be removed from South West England, the Midlands, and parts of Yorkshire. But, unlike Kent, these counties didn't have any water restrictions in place.

Recently Kent suppliers, Southern Water, South East Water and Veolia Water Southeast, gave Kent councils an update on the current status of water resources and discussed the effect of the recent rainfall.

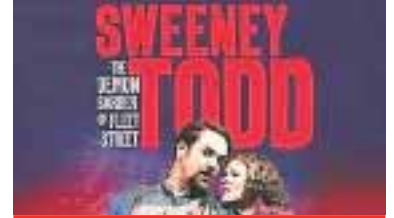

There are no plans for another meeting, but the companies say they will continue to work closely with the councils.

Both Southern Water and South East Water say they have no plans to put restrictions on commercial customers at present.

Vineyard takes battle over wine rule to Brussels MEPs

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT was billed as a 'non-wine tasting' by a Kent vineyard, but if all goes well the fun event could change European laws on what exactly constitutes a 'wine'.

The weird anomaly was discovered when Chapel Down boss Fraser Thompson went to Argentina and brought back a consignment of Malbec grapes to turn in to a limited edition wine.

But odd EU rules decided that because they came from outside its zone, 'wine' was definitely one word the Tenterden company couldn't use.

Instead the labels on the bottle described the drink as an 'alcoholic fruit-based beverage from produce sourced outside the European Union', and as Mr Thompson said: "That doesn't look great on a label."

In a fight back against the EU bureaucrats, crates of the Chapel Down produce were delivered to the European Parliament as Kent MEP Nigel Farage hosted the non-wine tasting in Brussels.

CHEERS: MEP Nigel Farage

The Ukip leader from Westerham held the event for MEPs to find out if they agreed with the EU ruling.

The drink was originally created by Chapel Down to celebrate World Malbec Day, but now has to be repackaged and marketed, costing thousands of pounds, unless the rules can be changed.

Mr Farage said: "I suspect people thought the EU reached the height of its loony directives with the bendy bananas, but this clearly shows that there is no amount of common sense which can't be overturned by an EU bureaucrat."

"It's not just the utter nonsense of saying that something which is clearly wine cannot be called wine, it's the impact of these directives which are having a devastating effect on our economy and our ability to drag this country out of a recession."

All those present, including MEPs from other countries which produce wine, agreed that it was a good, solid, enjoyable red wine and certainly not some fruit derived beverage.

Mr Farage has now asked the European Commission why wine produced in Moldova – not inside the EU, but a country which Brussels wishes to join its club – is allowed to call its produce 'wine' but not this drink from Kent.

TOURISM

Campsites striking gold as sports fans choose to pitch up for 2012 Olympic Games

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH Olympics fans facing premium hotel rates and a shortage of rooms, tents and caravans are set to prove popular during the Games.

Gravesham Borough Council has seized the initiative. It is converting a rugby field and recreational ground plus land at Culverstone into camp sites able to take more than 500 pitches at £30 a night, with a minimum stay of three nights.

Cllr David Turner said it will put the town on the tourism map.

He said: "As well as just providing the ground for the tents and caravans, there will also be other services provided like trips to nearby sights like Canterbury, the Historic Dockyard in Chatham and the Paddock Wood Hop Farm.

"People coming to stay will hopefully go away and say to themselves that Gravesham is a great place to stay.

"This really is a good base from which anyone can see the whole of the south of England."

The Camping and Caravan Club is backing the Gravesham plan.

It said: "The club is operating three campsites within this region during the summer of 2012, in partnership with Gravesham Borough Council – Gravesend Rugby Club, Old Gravesendians Rugby Club and a site in Culverstone.

"The campsites are located 22 miles east of the heart of London, close to Ebbsfleet International station, which will be operating a high-speed rail link to Stratford Station in London which is the Olympic Park and Olympic Stadium, with a journey time of approximately 10 minutes."

The campsites will have showers and toilets, and will be open from Friday, July 20, to Thursday, August 16.

And at Thriftwood Holiday Park, Stanstead, Sevenoaks, owner Mark Sellers is delighted at the demand. His facility won a Premium Listed Park tag at the UK Campsite Finder website.

He said: "We have had many people book us up for the Olympics already. This is a lovely site and we are filling quite quickly.

"Camping under the stars at night after a hectic time at the Olympic park is an ideal way to end the day."

Another top rated site is the Haven park at All-hallows where a seven night stay from July 28 in a two-bedroom caravan is £805, but at the time of writing, just two remained.

Other recommended sites include some at Charing, Folkestone, Whitstable and near Marden.

A spokesman for the Olympic organisers said: "Camping is a perfect alternative to a bricks and mortar hotel."

SHORT STAY: Campsites a hit with Games fans

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES: King Henry II spent a small fortune in the 1180s maintaining Dover Castle

Castle stages Henry II's fractious family reunion

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

TODAY it is one of the UK's most popular tourist attractions, towering above Dover and overlooking the English Channel.

But the impressive stone fortress of Dover Castle owes its impressive bulk to one of England's most famous kings.

Henry II is best known for his role in the death of Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Becket, but he was also the founder of an empire and was often found battling his own family.

The fiery monarch spent at least £6,440 throughout the 1180s – the equivalent of £3.5 million – more than a quarter of his average annual income, building and furnishing the impressive keep to show off his power to visiting royalty.

But now the simmering tensions which lay behind the throne are coming back to life in a series of re-enactments.

Today, English Heritage has recreated parts of Dover Castle as it would have looked in the days when Henry held there – and throughout the summer actors and actresses are taking on the roles of members of his household.

Henry himself is in residence with his ward – and possible lover – Princess Alys, sister of King Philip of France, along with Prince John, later to be one of England's least highly thought of monarchs.

And visiting is his wife Queen Eleanor of Aquitaine – who has just been released from imprisonment for supporting her sons in a rebellion against the King.

Visitors to the castle are greeted by the beautiful Alys who had been betrothed to Henry's son Richard the Lionheart since the age of two. In her 20s she is unmarried – and in fact never marries Richard.

Eleanor makes a grand entrance to the castle and before long is in colourful argument with her royal husband while trying to make the best of her visit and find out exactly what the King is planning for her. Meanwhile John is skulking and scheming in the background.

A spokeswoman for English Heritage said: "Although the recreation can never be 100 per cent accurate it shows the backbiting and struggles within the family.

"They really did all want power and they all wanted the throne. The cast will be recreating scenarios which were a part of the royal household's intrigues and bringing history to life."

The personalities of this warring family are complex.

Chroniclers at the time describe Henry II as not handsome, but larger than most men, stocky and powerfully built. His personality was overpowering as was his anger.

He loved hunting and was a good military commander, forging the Angevin Empire in England and France.

But he was also able to speak several languages and liked to read and take part in scholarly debates. His knights also found him very approachable and he is said never to have forgotten a face once introduced.

Meanwhile Eleanor, 11 years older than her husband, had formally been married to King Louis VII of France, who annulled the marriage because of family ties between husband and wife.

Strong willed and impetuous, Eleanor was also alleged to have had an affair with Henry's father, Geoffrey of Anjou.

Eleanor seems to have regarded her first duty as to her sons, who she supported when they rebelled against him.

Allied to Philip of France, Richard's forces ambushed Henry after a peace conference and the King seems to have finally broken and become delirious when he discovered John had joined the rebellion.

Henry died at the Chateau Chinon on July 6, 1189, and lies entombed in Fontevraud Abbey, near Chinon in the Anjou Region of France.

OPINION

Police privatisation a real threat

Ian Pointon, Kent Police Federation chairman, issues a warning against a cuts programme which could lead to privatisation of some police roles

WHENEVER I talk about police privatisation and the inherent threat to policing by consent, I am often met with a mixture of shock, horror and disbelief.

Such reactions are hardly surprising as there is a total absence of public debate about privatisation.

There should be, but it is happening in an opaque, piecemeal way; unless you are 'in the know' it is difficult to assemble the pieces.

Policing is being subjected to 20 per cent budget cuts that will result in 500 fewer police officers and 1,000 fewer police staff in Kent alone; yet policing hasn't surrendered any of its responsibilities and functions.

It's business as usual – just with considerably fewer people.

This creates a service delivery gap and, in turn, an economic opportunity for the private sector to step in.

In other police forces privatisation is already happening for HR, payroll, control rooms and custody suites. This is all done in the name of keeping police officers on the street.

That's laudable many will say, streamlining what they term the 'back office' to bolster the frontline.

Now look at what is happening in Surrey and West Midlands Police Forces where they are actively engaging with the private sector, inviting bids for police roles such as neighbourhood patrol, crime investigation and managing high-risk offenders. These aren't back office roles. By any definition they are frontline police roles.

South Yorkshire Police are intent on rebadging their PCSOs as 'local beat officers' and corraling police officers into 'task teams' to be deployed when police powers or force needs to be exercised.

They are effectively removing police officers from any ordinary contact with the public.

Now link this to Tom Winsor's recommendation for a fitness test for police officers, a flawed recommendation based on occupational health figures from the Metropolitan Police.

If you base your evidence on a doctor's surgery you will conclude the entire world is ill.

There is a clear desire for every officer to be ready for confrontation. Why? As the number of police officers reduces, the 'softer' elements of frontline policing will be left to the private sector, PCSOs or other agencies until they too are privatised. What will be left for police officers? Confrontation and enforcement.

Is privatisation happening in Kent? No, but how long before it does? How long before the cuts force the newly elected Police and Crime Commissioners into the arms of the private sector?

But does all this really matter? Not only does it matter, it should be of huge concern to everyone.

To gain and maintain that consent, policing has to be imbedded in our daily lives

When Sir Robert Peel established policing he chose a specific model; he chose policing by the people for the people; he chose policing by consent; he modelled it as a civil not a military authority.

To gain and maintain that consent, policing has to be imbedded as an intrinsic part of all our daily lives and not just rolled out when force or coercion is required.

It is imperative that policing continues to be accountable to the public and not to shareholders.

On May 10, 35,000 off-duty police officers – more than 400 from Kent – marched in protest through the streets of London. They didn't march over pay and pensions. They marched to protest against the cuts to and the privatisation of policing.

They marched to preserve policing by consent.

KOS COMMENT

Is privatisation the future for our force?

IT'S doubtful anyone would want to be standing in the shoes of Kent Police's management right now.

With massive budget cuts, but no let up on pressure to retain policing as we know it, it's an unenviable task.

That's why the force should be applauded for managing, so far, to steer clear of any form of privatisation.

But it's quite right Kent Police Federation chairman Ian Pointon should address what seems to be the inevitable.

Other forces are already outsourcing services and it's likely our own will have to consider it at some point. Plans have already been unveiled to shut police stations, so it's hard to see how privatisation will not cross the new police commissioner's mind at some point.

Keep it clean for 2012

WE LIVE in a beautiful county and yet some seem intent on wrecking it through sheer laziness. How hard is it really to put rubbish in the bin?

The High Sheriff of Kent is right; we are the Gateway to England and the place many will arrive to during the Olympics – so let's clean up our act.

NO Estuary Airport

Boris needs to look elsewhere

THE estuary airport would involve the ripping up of a nature area. Another area eaten up by human stupidity and wasting billions of pounds.

How Boris Johnson got back in as London Mayor, even if you are a staunch Conservative, is amazing.

Manston has been there for years, with long runways ideal for development.

Adrian Ottley, Birchington

WE WERE delighted to read that you are joining the fight against the proposed airport.

So much has already been written it is almost impossible to find something new, beyond the fact it cannot be allowed to go ahead.

We have emailed Boris many, many times, as have our friends. We were particularly disgusted to see that schoolchildren are being told to write in favour of it.

In the 20 years living in our house we have seen our immediate area destroyed, every blade of grass built on.

How many trees have been cut down at the Black Lion for a few weeks of Olympics?

Kent is overpopulated. If the population continues to rise at such an impossible rate, surely it is more important to secure quality of life.

Anita and Malcolm White, Gillingham

I DEFINITELY support the campaign to STOP the estuary airport.

Diana Woodward, Tunbridge Wells.

WITH so many under-used airports in the South East, especially Manston, we do not need a new hub airport for London with all the disruption to thousands of Kent residents' lives and homes.

We do not have the infrastructure to cope with it.

Please can someone in authority tell Boris Johnson he is the elected Mayor of London and not the Mayor of South East England and certainly not the Prime Minister.

What right has he to interfere with Kent without us having a vote for his office?

After all, London of old has already stolen parts of Kent so maybe he plans to build his empire by annexing the rest of the county.

P Hughes, Broadstairs

I WOULD like to support your campaign opposing plans to build an airport in the Thames Estuary.

The noise that people and our wildlife will be exposed to, both during the development of any airport and then from incoming and outgoing flights will be devastating.

Noise complaints are a huge problem for any airport. I notice that words like ecological damage and quality of life are mentioned, but noise is not. The impact of noise should not be underestimated.

You may be interested to know that Boris Johnson was shortlisted for my Noise Tzar Blue Mu Award, announced on International Noise Awareness Day, April 25.

He was not chosen as my final winner, but this is because I felt the idea of the Thames Estuary airport was something unlikely to be a reality.

Now, after reading your paper and finding out that following his re-election Boris has made a direct plea to David Cameron to consider his proposal. There is real danger this could come to fruition.

This would be a disaster and therefore I would like to join your fight to oppose this plan.

Val Weedon MBE, by email

WHILE I agree that Boris's plan for an estuarine airport is bonkers, the resistance to using Manston is criminal.

Longest runway in Europe with all the equipment and already one of the largest air cargo airports in the UK.

The high-speed train goes past it and a Manston Parkway station is on the drawing board which would put London just over an hour away.

It is a no-brainer but you, the local nimbys who moved near Manston and then start complaining, Boris and Government have a problem with Manston which I have yet to get to the bottom of.

Lord Adonis went silent for 45 seconds when asked in front of an audience at Kent University why not use Manston and categorically refused to answer the question put again and again by Sir Robert Worcester.

Ian R Swingland OBE, by email

...but maybe he's not wrong

I WANT to tell you how annoyed I was when I read your article deriding the proposed estuary airport.

Of course I respect your views on this matter, but why cannot you respect mine?

No public debate has yet been had and you have no right to assume you are blessed with divine wisdom.

Since HM Dockyard Chatham closed in 1984, the Medway Towns have never recovered.

Chatham is now an absolute sink, full of undesirables.

Just stand at the junction of Military Road and the High Street for a few moments during business hours and you will see exactly what I mean.

Without even changing the direction of your glance you will see every race, colour and creed passing by, together with convoys of teenage females, either pregnant, or pushing infants in buggies.

The proposed estuary airport means proper regeneration, modernisation, and prosperity. Property prices will rise as will employment opportunities. I say three cheers for Sir Norman Foster.

RJ Church, via email

I CANNOT support the campaign to stop an airport being built in the estuary.

I am a wildlife photographer and a great supporter of Kent having been the Kentish Fare and Produced in Kent manager.

But the airport is required and this is a perfect site.

I do not believe it is the wildlife lovers who are supporting this. If they are they know very little on how adjustable and adaptable wildlife is particularly birds.

I think it is the posh folk who do not want their silence and space spoilt and are using nature as a reason.

Take a close look at Nairobi National Park which is right on the airport and see how the wildlife, big and small have adapted to this.

Secondly, look at the Nasa site in Florida. This launch site is on a national park which has outstanding birdlife.

Now let's look at the biggest advantage to the population living in Medway. Dare I say that Medway is becoming a tip and that it offers no future for the next generation.

Building an airport will give job opportunities to the unemployed, it will bring financial resources and income to these towns. Based on this I cannot accept the proposal to stop the airport.

Which way to turn now over car lease problem?

Q THIS is probably an unusual question. I am self-employed, with my own small business, and I lease a car from a company that has gone into administration. Does this mean my lease automatically ends? Could the car simply be repossessed? I should emphasise my own business is not in any trouble, and payments for the car are bang up-to-date.

A WHEN a business goes into administration it is not quite as bad as if it goes into receivership or liquidation. The administrators will try to keep it going while they look for a buyer who will take over some or all of the company and its clients. If a new owner is found, your lease will continue and nothing will change. But if nobody comes forward to take over the business, then the leasing company's assets will have to be turned into cash for the benefit of the company's creditors – and those assets will include your car. The administrators should keep you informed, and if the worst comes to the worst, they should simply ask you to arrange the return of the car. It is highly unlikely that anyone will simply turn up one day and demand the keys without warning, so do keep up whatever payments are due under your leasing contract.

Q I AM writing on behalf of my brother-in-law, who has been made redundant. He has been told he can start to draw his occupational pension now, or he can wait until he is 65. His wife works, so they could afford to delay his pension if that is best. What do you recommend?

A THE paperwork you sent me shows that your brother-in-law is in a final salary pension scheme. The normal retirement age is 65, but he is 60 now and could draw his pension immediately. However, if he draws the pension now, it will be reduced because the pension fund will be paying for five years longer than planned. On the other hand, if he waits then his pension entitlement should rise to keep pace with inflation over the next five years. Unless men in his family tend not to live to a good old age, he will do better to wait for his pension as long as he and his wife can afford to do so.

Q CAN you please explain the legal rights of grown-up stepchildren when their stepfather dies? Are they entitled to inherit anything, even if there is no will?

A IF THE stepfather leaves a will, then the stepchildren are just as entitled to a bequest as any other beneficiary. But when someone dies intestate – without a will – the law lays down who gets what, and stepchildren receive nothing. They have no automatic rights unless the deceased parent actually adopted them, in which case they are treated the same as the parent's other children.

Q FOUR years ago we received a letter from our life assurance company warning us that our endowment mortgage policy was likely to fall short of its target. We complained to the Financial Ombudsman that we had expected the policy to pay enough to cover our mortgage, but he rejected the complaint as we had signed something years ago that said that policy projections were an estimate and not a guarantee. Now the policy has matured and we are more than £20,000 short of the sum needed to repay our mortgage, so can we ask the ombudsman to reopen the case as we have been proved right?

A THE ombudsman will not reconsider the original verdict, but this does not stop you bringing a civil court action if you think the life company misled you. However, I admit I am puzzled. You say you have been proved right, but all that has happened is the life company's forecast of a shortfall has turned out to be correct. The key point is whether or not you accepted this was a risk, and if there is evidence you agreed the payout was not guaranteed, then I suspect any court would agree with the ombudsman's decision.

Q HAS the Government withdrawn its safety guarantee from Northern Rock savers? If so, would we be well advised to move our money out?

A THE guarantee began when the government rescued Northern Rock in 2007, but it ended in 2010, except for fixed-term accounts that were already in force. Treat it now like any other bank or building society, covered by the industry-wide safety net for up to £85,000 of savings

Energy firm fuels fears of another hike in prices

By Adam Aiken

MyMoney 24 editor

THERE are fears householders will be hit by further rises in the cost of gas and electricity after one of the country's biggest suppliers said its costs were continuing to mount.

Centrica, which owns British Gas, recently said the trend for energy costs "remained upwards", and it said wholesale gas prices for next winter were up 15pc.

The company – one of the 'big six' suppliers – said this and other costs would add £50 to the cost of supplying the average household this year.

The past couple of months have seen price cuts across the industry. But all the major suppliers cut either their gas tariffs or their electricity tariffs – not both.

And although those cuts helped ease the pressure on hard-pressed consumers, they failed to negate earlier price rises.

British Gas, for example, had put up its gas bills by 18pc in August and electricity by 16pc.

Any suggestion that there are further hikes on the horizon will alarm the company's 16 million domestic customers, as well as those of rival suppliers.

"The prospect of further rises in fuel bills will be a huge worry for many people who are already struggling to cope with last year's increases," said Gillian Guy, chief executive at Citizens Advice.

"Many household budgets are at breaking point and we urge British Gas to think about its customers and the extra pressure any rise will put on their finances.

"Energy companies need to keep prices as low as possible to avoid more people being pushed into fuel poverty or debt."

Audrey Gallacher, director of energy at Consumer Focus, said: "Consumers will need clear evidence that price rises are warranted if they are to stomach further increases to their bills.

"People simply don't know whether what they are asked to pay is fair. The perception is that suppliers are quick to pass on high price rises and slow to pass on small price cuts.

"Much greater transparency on costs, pricing and profits is needed for customers to know whether they're getting a fair deal.

"Wholesale prices go up and down, but customers need to know this is accurately reflected in their bills.

"With additional costs also set to be added to our bills, to make our energy supply greener and more secure, it is essential that help is put in place for those who need it.

"We believe extra revenue the Government receives from carbon taxes should be used to help the millions of people who are being hit by rising costs."

Tom Lyon, at Uswitch.com, said: "This is deeply worrying as consumers are still struggling to come to terms with the average £224 increase in bills from the end of 2010, and they enjoyed only a £41 reduction at the beginning of this year.

"Any further increases will see even more people seriously struggling to afford their bills.

"We would urge all suppliers to hold fire for as long as possible and to ensure that if they do move, it is only in response to a sustained upward trend. It's also important that they recognise the impact it will have on their customers.

"For consumers, it's clear that suppliers are warning of trouble ahead.

"I would urge them to prepare for the worst and to ensure that they are on a competitively-priced energy plan and to make their homes as energy-efficient as possible by taking up one of the many subsidised insulation offers available on the market."

Energy suppliers themselves have pots of money to spend on helping with energy-efficiency.

Mr Lyon said: "They are moving towards a deadline to have spent it, which means that many households could be in line to benefit."

Taxman giveth with one hand and taketh away with the other as millions face PAYE changes

UP TO 3.5 million people are set to receive tax refunds from this week, but as many as 1.6 million face bills for underpaid tax from HM Revenue and Customs.

Those who are due rebates will get average windfalls of £379, while the typical shortfall for those who have not paid enough is £537, under Pay As You Earn (PAYE) adjustments for the 2011-12 tax year.

The bills and refunds, which are a normal part of the PAYE process, are being handed out two months earlier than last year, meaning people will get their money back more quickly as well as knowing exactly what they owe, HMRC said.

Under PAYE, a tax code is allocated to each taxpayer to ensure the right amount of tax is deducted at source, but people can end up paying too much or too little when their circumstances change and HMRC is not told.

About 85pc of people generally pay the correct amount of tax during the year, but end-of-year adjustments are made for the 15pc who do not.

This is usually because they may have moved jobs or had gaps between periods of work, for example.

Labour call for investigation into Regional Growth Fund 'shambles'

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE fund which is set to inject £35 million into businesses in east Kent has been slammed in an official report.

Labour has called for a Commons committee to investigate the running of the £2.4 billion Regional Growth Fund (RGF) after criticism by the National Audit Office (NAO).

Last week Business Week reported how the county's business community had welcomed the cash input as a boost for an area hit by the withdrawal of drugs manufacturer Pfizer.

Expansion East Kent has promised to create 5,000 new jobs across Canterbury, Shepway, Dover and Thanet, as well as invest £5 million into transport infrastructure.

But the body providing the cash is now under severe criticism.

The NAO report says the fund, introduced 15 months ago, is likely to create just 41,000 jobs across the UK – rather than the 328,000 the Government claimed.

It further says those jobs will come at a cost to the taxpayer of £33,000 – an increase of £5,000 per job over employment opportunities created by the previous Regional Development Agencies.

And in some cases the NAO said it had cost as much as £200,000 for a single job to be created.

ATTACKING: Shadow skills minister Gordon Marsden

Labour now says the Public Accounts Committee, headed by Margaret Hodge, should launch an investigation.

Leading the call is shadow skills minister

Gordon Marsden, who last year was keynote speaker at Business Week Live – organized by Archant KOS Media.

"The report underlines our criticism that the RGF has been shambolic, has been improvised in nature, and is a failure in administration," he said.

The report states: "The fund has not optimized value for money because a significant proportion of the £1.4bn (the sum already given out as £1bn is still to be spent) was allocated to projects that offered relatively few jobs for the money invested."

The report further claims: "There was scope to have generated more jobs relative to the amount of grant awarded" and applying tighter controls on allocation "could have created thousands more jobs from the same resources".

"There has been very little transparency over the bid selection process and we have been stonewalled in our enquiries. That is not good enough," said Mr Marsden.

"We also want to see some regional input into the selection process. This is a fund for the regions, but is being micro-managed by Whitehall."

Business secretary Vince Cable said: "We have already put in place some of the NAO's recommendations, such as making more administrative resources available, which means projects are being processed even faster."

Olympic Torch bearer sums up his feelings

ACCOUNTANCY company Reeves says that employee Phil Reynolds will be running as a Torchbearer in the London 2012 Olympic Torch Relay.

Reynolds will be running in Westgate-on-Sea on Thursday July 19.

He said: "I'm very honoured to have been selected for this opportunity and have had a great response from friends, family and clients.

"To be honest, the whole experience has still not dawned on me yet. I don't think it will hit me until you start to see pictures of the Torch going round the country".

Clive Stevens, managing partner at Reeves which has offices in Canterbury and Chatham, said: "I was delighted that Phil was chosen. He deserves this chance in recognition of all his community and charitable efforts, especially in raising money for Demelza when he was one of the Reeves skydivers".

He was nominated through Lloyds TSB, Presenting Partner of the London 2012 Olympic Torch Relay.

A Lloyds spokesman added: "We are delighted that Phil has been confirmed as a Lloyds TSB Olympic Torchbearer. We are proud to be bringing the excitement of the Olympic Torch Relay and are looking forward to seeing each and every one of our Torchbearers representing the work they do in their local community."

CONFERENCE

Dragon's Den star's free words of business wisdom as B2B meeting

THERE are not many occasions when an audience can come along for free and hear from one of the country's most successful businessmen.

Richard Farleigh, the former entrepreneur from BBC's Dragon's Den, is the keynote speaker at Kent Invicta Chamber's B2B conference at Ashford International Hotel on July 3.

Since the mid-1990s, he has been involved in backing more early-stage companies than anyone else in the UK.

His philosophy has been described as: "When Farleigh invests in a firm, he checks the technology, the competition, customer endorsements and management teams, because there is more technology around than there is good management."

When Farleigh started his career in an investment bank he did not believe he could out-perform the markets.

As a former economist and chess player, it seemed to him to be just gambling.

However, he began to believe market prices were predictable and within a few years his trading desk dealt in hundreds of millions of dollars.

He developed a repeatable methodology based on observation and reasoning and the rest as they say is history.

Aged 34, he had made more than enough money to retire.

Chamber chief executive Jo James said: "If you are thinking of starting up a business, if you are running a successful business, or if you are struggling to stay afloat – not unlikely in today's economic climate – there is always something to be gained from listening to somebody like Richard.

"He is a prime example of an entrepreneur who can rise to the taunt of 'put your money where your mouth is'; you can be sure that what he says is valuable."

RENEWABLES

Special air service for wind farm employees

ONE of the major companies involved in the construction of London Array, the world's largest offshore wind farm located off the Thanet coast, has commissioned a weekly scheduled service operating from Manston Airport for some of its workers.

The charter operated by JoinJet, part of Sun-Air of Scandinavia, a subsidiary of British Airways, is operating on behalf of Siemens and will fly senior engineers from Manston to Billund in Denmark. The journey, aboard a 32-seat Dornier 328 will take approximately 90 minutes.

Chris Randle, project manager offshore wind at Siemens, said: "Everybody involved in the London Array project is working to very tight deadlines to bring phase 1 of this exciting project online and deliver renewable energy for 470,000 households, which is two-thirds of all the homes in Kent and Medway.

"The air service will make it possible to move essential staff quickly and efficiently between the construction site and our offices in Denmark. It will now make it possible for our staff to be at home in Denmark within two hours of coming ashore at Ramsgate."

Charles Buchanan, chief executive of Manston Airport, which is currently up for sale, said: "We are delighted to play our part in supporting the growth of the renewable sector in Kent and in particular the London Array wind farm."

Outlet fashions big rise in Euro shoppers looking to buy British

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

BUSINESS from across the English Channel is providing a major boost for by McArthurGlen Ashford's Designer Outlet.

Top designer UK heritage collections are proving an attraction for shoppers from the Continent and the outlet has embarked on a large-scale advertising campaign in Dover.

Latest figures show the number of shoppers from abroad is up 52 per cent on last year at McArthurGlen, with France and Germany best represented.

Visitors from Holland, Luxembourg and Belgium are also making an increasing number of visits to the outlet, using the Eurostar which stops at Ashford International Station.

British attire from brands including Ted Baker, Kurt Geiger and Jaeger are among the most popular purchases.

David Maddison, centre manager said: "Following the success of last year's advertising campaign, which was viewed by more than 12 million tourists, the centre has seen a gradual rise in the number of overseas shoppers."

"In 2011, tourists alone represented 15 per cent of total shopper numbers and 20 per cent of spend. Evidence suggests it is the strong British heritage brands such as Henri Lloyd, Jaeger and Phase Eight attracting visitors, as they seek out quintessentially British style at value for money prices."

This month the outlet centre staged a fashion show on the White Cliffs of Dover to further publicise its brands.

Style consultant Deborah Eastlake said: "We styled the shoot to emulate the look overseas shoppers are seeking when they come to the centre. Many of them are in search of the distinctive British style associated with modern fashion icons such as Kate Middleton, Emma Watson and Ed Westwick."

"They're keen to emulate a look that's preppy and on-trend – products that will add an element of je ne sais quoi to their existing wardrobe."

SECURITY

Director's role in safe hands

SECURITY consultants The Inkerman Group has announced that Michael Allen, MBE has been appointed to its board of directors as an executive director. This comes as the company continues on a period of significant growth and business consolidation.

Having worked for the Ashford-based business for the last three years, he has already brought significant operational and management experience, particularly with regard to the company's challenge of global expansion.

His team delivers the company's key services such as emergency evacuations, travel safe, tracking, 24/7 support and response to internationally-based clients and operationally deployed teams throughout the world, currently including the Middle East region, specialist event security, close protection, CCTV monitoring and specialist guarding services.

In 2002, Mr Allen was awarded an MBE in the Queen's Birthday Honours list for his outstanding commitment and contribution to explosive ordnance disposal in the military division.

Mr Allen said: "I am extremely pleased to be invited to join the board at this time; it is an exciting opportunity, in particularly challenging times."

"The Inkerman Group has great potential – it continues to grow and develop its client base and specialist products and services globally. This is a particularly important growth time for the business as the company continues to secure new contracts."

Kent hit as well-known high street brands announce shop closures

FASHION chain French Connection has put up the 'For Sale' sign outside 14 of its shops in large shopping centres across the UK – including its Bluewater outlet.

Poor performance in the second half of 2011 is one of the reasons for the move.

The brand, once famous for its FCUK branded T-shirts, has been struggling in recent years with City analysts and fashion gurus saying it has lost its way.

French Connection has hired property agent Ashley Phillips Lahaise to sell the leases. It will only close shops if another retailer takes over the leases.

The up-market high street fashion house, which has 71 shops in the UK and Ireland and 46 concessions in the UK and Europe, has fared better in emerging markets and plans 12 shops in China and 15 in India.

Its chief executive and chairman, Stephen Marks, is conducting a review of the business following the "most difficult winter season I have seen in all the years I have been in business".

Its UK and European retail business made a loss of £8.2 million in the year to January 31, while profits plunged 32 per cent to £5m. As part of the review, it sold off its Nicole Farhi business last year.

French Connection shares, which hit 487p in 2004, closed down 0.25p to 42.75p.

And in a further blow for high street retailers cards and gifts retailer Clinton Cards, which has branches across the county, says it expects to enter administration.

The retailer is set to become the latest casualty on the high street after its biggest supplier American Greetings bought up loans from its banks and promptly called them in.

Clinton Cards said in a statement announcing the suspension of trading in its shares, it had been in breach of some conditions attached to £35m of loans and that it was not in a position to repay them.

The group said it had been informed by Barclays and Royal Bank of Scotland, which had given it temporary waivers over the breaches, had sold the loans.

LEGAL

Lynn gives up newspaper career to take on the law

KENT-based Buss Murton Law LLP has appointed solicitor Angharad Lynn to the family team. She will divide her time between the firm's offices in Tunbridge Wells, Cranbrook and Dartford.

Prior to her appointment Lynn spent more than two years at Cripps Harries Hall in Tunbridge Wells and has also spent several years working on national newspapers.

She said: "After a number of years working for newspapers such as the Daily Express and the Mail on Sunday, I decided to combine starting a family with retraining for a career in the law. After a part-time conversion course and a two and a half year training contract I am glad to have made the leap into law."

Alan Williams, managing partner, said: "We are delighted that Angharad has joined the team. "There are likely to be some interesting developments for family law solicitors over the coming year as the Government pushes through legislation to allow gay marriage which will be watched with interest."

University wins gold for creativity in Olympics role

A CULTURAL Olympiad scheme led by the University for the Creative Arts (UCA) has won a prestigious London 2012 award.

The Creative Campus Initiative (CCI) saw off more than 230 entries to pick up the gold medal for best creative cultural project at the prestigious Podium Awards in London.

The one-off event recognised the role colleges and universities have played in delivering this year's Olympic and Paralympic Games. UCA, which has campuses in Rochester, Maidstone, and Canterbury, has led the CCI, a consortium of 11 universities in the South East, since 2009.

It became the country's largest higher education programme in support of the Cultural Olympiad and has seen 15 of its projects recognised with official London 2012 Inspire marks. It has created more than 100 events, ranging from exhibitions, performances and school visits to large-scale sports art, such as the Big Swim, where participants swam in a cloud of Olympic colours.

Professor Seymour Roworth-Stokes, UCA Pro vice-chancellor and chair of the CCI steering group, said: "We set out four years ago with a very simple aim: to exploit the cultural assets and resources of universities in the South East in support of the Cultural Olympiad. Since then, we have reached more than half a million people by bringing sport and art together as a creative response to the Olympic and Paralympic values. Of course, legacy is about people and this award will help ensure we inspire the next generation of artist, designers and creative practitioners."

CUSTOMERS of one of the county's biggest housing associations have had the chance to hone their IT skills thanks to some free training sessions.

The lessons were held by mhs Homes as part of Adult Learners' Week, which ran from May 12-18, from the association's express office in High Street, Chatham.

As part of the short sessions, customers were shown how to use email and search engine Google. They were also shown how to create a 'my mhs homes' account, which will allow them to check their rent account, log property repairs and leave comments.

Among those taking part was 68-year-old Iris Witt, from Wayfield, who wanted to use the service from her new mobile phone.

She said: "I've never used a computer before, but I've got a new phone with internet and I thought this would be a good time to learn all about it. It's actually really easy, I'm surprised at how easy it is."

Joining Iris for the short course was Tracey Poole, 41, from Hoo. She said: "It's good just to be able to use a computer and get new skills. It's so easy to use I will be able to help other people get online and show them what it's all about."

Customer service team leader at mhs Homes Emma Dumbrell said: "It is a very simple way to learn how to use a computer, but has enormous benefits.

"It means our customers can contact us at a time that suits them and it gives them skills they can use in other areas."

Football League side is top of the class after signing college terms

IN the cut-throat world of professional football, careers can be over faster than a Messi run or a Drogba dive.

And for many, seeing their dream disappear comes with the added agony of not having the qualifications to fall back on to forge themselves a successful living.

However, a new initiative by North West Kent College and League Two side Gillingham could help ease that problem.

The two have put pen to paper for a new scheme aimed at developing elite footballers along with studying academic qualifications.

North West Kent College, which has sites in both Dartford and Gravesend, has more than eight years' experience working in this field, with a great deal of success.

Gillingham welcomed the partnership and said it sees the deal as a major extension to its recruitment arm under the new Elite Player Performance Plan.

The deal comes just as the club saw first hand how the fickle nature of the sport can change careers in a heartbeat. Last week Andy Heshenthaler left as manager, while five players were also released from the club.

Academy manager Darren Hare said: "When I was approached with the opportunity, I really felt it was something we needed to do.

"Our recruitment of players extends all over Kent, but it will enhance our programme to be able to have a base in north Kent, on the outskirts of London, to give us a chance of competing with the bigger clubs under the new EPPP regulations."

The programme will run initially both at the Dartford site as well as in Medway, and includes a mix of high quality football coaching and training along with a bespoke academic pathway.

Students will have a choice of sports-related qualifications to study, and the teams will take part in the Conference Youth League wearing the Gills colours, and playing games at the club's training ground at Beeching's Cross, in Gillingham.

Mr Hare added: "Obviously we wanted to embrace all aspects, and to have a say in the football side of things, and the college have welcomed that involvement.

"We know the head coaches on the scheme well and we will watch the players develop with interest, and who knows, if we can get one or two to make the transition from this college academy to our own apprenticeship programme, we will be delighted.

"It also provides us with a better exit and progression strategy for our under-16 players when they are told they are not getting an apprenticeship – sometimes you can be wrong, and this could be a great place to keep an eye on them too if they wanted to."

Chris Lydon, who is the associate director of sport and leisure at North West Kent College said: "I am delighted to be working in partnership with Gillingham.

"The education and football scheme allows learners aged 16-18 to continue their full-time education whilst developing their football talents under the guidance of Uefa coaches.

"Obviously being in partnership with a professional football club is very exciting and will allow talented young players to pursue their ambitions in football whilst still being able to study.

"I am delighted with the involvement of Gillingham and I particularly look forward to working with Darren and his team as the scheme develops."

Youngsters are really cooking in National Juniorchef competition

BUDDING cooks have competed for the coveted title of National Juniorchef under the gaze of award-winning celebrity chef Gary Rhodes.

The annual event, held at Thanet College, sees hundreds of school-age entrants from across the UK whittled down to just six finalists based on the strength of their menu.

The finalists then take part in a tense cook-off at Thanet College under the watchful eye of TV chef Gary Rhodes, a former student at the college.

This year marks the 10th event, with entrants required to produce a main course and dessert in three hours.

Mr Rhodes said the contest is a fantastic opportunity for young people to show their passion for cooking and develop important culinary skills.

"The great thing about this competition is how it's inspiring young people," he said.

"They want to cook and not only do they want to cook, they're taking it home, they're experimenting with the dishes."

Thanet College catering student Matthew Cowell took home the 2010 prize.

"I was studying a pre-vocational catering course at the time, but wasn't serious about becoming a chef.

"My feelings changed after winning the competition, I realised just how much I'd learned and how much I enjoyed cooking. I decided it was the career for me."

Students win their fourth victory in Army Skills Challenge

MIDKENT College public services students have battled it out against their rivals to secure a fourth straight win in the annual Army Skills Challenge.

The event, at Sir John Moore Barracks in Shorncliffe, Folkestone, saw colleges and schools from Kent compete for the coveted first place position.

Tasks included an indoor and outdoor assault course, an interactive laser shootout and a timed buggy race.

MidKent College, which has campuses in Medway and Maidstone, lifted the trophy for the fourth year running after finishing the main course in just eight minutes, 23 seconds – almost a minute-and-a-half faster than runners-up Canterbury College.

Programme area leader Katriona Topps said this was testimony to the value of the weekly two-hour fitness sessions undertaken as part of the students' public services course.

She added: "The challenge is an excellent event offering students an insight into army life and keeping those who have already applied for the service motivated until they join.

"It allows for competition between colleges

CONTEST: Colleges and schools competed against each other in the annual army challenge and schools, and showcases the advantages of taking a public services course in advance of a related career. We believe the calibre of students from MidKent College is high and that events such as this help to equip them with the abilities to meet the needs of future employers."

MidKent College's public services courses prepare students for entry into professions including the police, military and fire service.

Entrepreneurs in the making show what they're made of in contest

WE'RE used to watching the candidates on BBC's The Apprentice being put through their paces as they battle their way through each task under the watchful eye of Lord Alan Sugar.

But for year nine pupils at Highsted Grammar School in Sittingbourne this pressure became a reality as they took part in an Apprentice-style event, competing in groups to win a bid to cater for a formal dinner.

Set up as entrepreneurs, the youngsters posed as competing catering companies; planning and designing menus, and explaining the supply, and serving of the food. They were judged on their ability to present and deliver a project on time and to budget.

The event was part of Nat-West's MoneySense for Schools, a national, curriculum-based programme of interactive modules, developed by the bank with the help of teachers to teach business and financial skills to youngsters.

Highsted Grammar School teacher Chris Muir, who organised the event, said: "It's very important that our students gain basic money management skills and have the opportunity to develop their entrepreneurial and creative abilities.

"This activity was an extremely practical and fun way of doing this and brought alive what happens in real life."

KENT CRISPS

Students snap up practical experience

PHOTOGRAPHY student Bex Littlechild has won £150 for creating the winning picture in a competition to illustrate the quality and provenance of Kent Crisps.

Producer Quex Foods, based in Birchington, teamed up with Thanet College to challenge BTEC students studying for their extended diploma in art and design to develop images and artwork that could be used in future marketing and advertising for Kent Crisps.

Bex Littlechild's stunning picture of oysters in front of a seascape at Kingsgate Bay with white cliffs was chosen as the winner. Judges also highly commended the work of three other students, China Wiseham, James Winkless and Sue Anderson.

Anthony Curwen, chairman of Quex Foods, said: "We were impressed with the imagination and technical skill of the students in highlighting the quality, provenance and Kentish roots of our crisps. Community partnerships to promote Kent are at the heart of our business, and projects like this help us to get involved."

More than 30 students from Years 1 and 2 took part. Thanet College photography and media lecturer Chris Amess said:

"This project with Kent Crisps has given our students the practical experience of working on a task in the real world, in which they had to consider the client's requirements and meet a fixed deadline."

Made from locally-grown potatoes and hand-cooked for premium quality and texture, Kent Crisps reflect the tastes and landscapes of the county. Flavours include a first for the crisps industry – oyster and vinegar, plus Great Taste Award winner Ashmore cheese and onion, sea salt and Biddenden cider vinegar and sea salt.

Kent Crisps are on sale at selected Waitrose stores, farm shops, cafés, delis, pubs, village shops and tourist attractions, including Turner Contemporary and Canterbury Cathedral.

Sales help to maintain Quex Park, one of Kent's historic estates and the Powell-Cotton Museum, plus other attractions.

PALLETWAYS

Distribution firm expands into new base

THE Palletways Group, Europe's largest distribution network for palletised freight, has expanded its operations with the opening of a new depot in Dartford.

The 19,500 sq ft depot is the latest addition to Palletways' existing facilities in Lichfield, Edinburgh, Oxford and Greenford (London) and marks a milestone in the company's future plans for growth.

The opening of the new depot will see the company collect and deliver small consignments of palletised freight to local customers for onwards delivery across the UK, Ireland, the Benelux countries, Denmark, France, Germany, Spain, Portugal and Italy.

The move has also resulted in the recruitment of five new staff members, bringing the total number of employees working at the depot to 14.

Andy Turner, managing director for Palletways Owned Operations, said: "The move to open a new depot in Dartford is part of a wider national and international growth strategy.

"Over the years, we have built a very efficient delivery network and Dartford presented a number of good business opportunities, which would allow us to replicate the success we've had in other parts of the UK and mainland Europe."

Palletways, which was set up in 1994, has 300 plus depots across the group, delivering 3.5 million pallets per year throughout the UK and nearly two million pallets a year in mainland Europe.

LOCATE IN KENT

Success for planning consultants

THREE of Locate in Kent's commercial partners have been recognised as among the leading planning consultants in the county – demonstrating the county is a good place to do business.

Barton Willmore, Peter Brett Associates and DHA Planning all ranked highly in Planning Magazine's 2011 survey of chartered town planners.

Barton Willmore, which has a regional office at Ebbsfleet was also recognised as the industry's leading employer in the UK, with 134 chartered planners around the country.

Peter Brett Associates, which has offices in Ashford, was ranked joint 18th, employing 31 chartered planners, while DHA Planning from Maidstone was joint 31st with 14, all in Kent.

In another key indicator, Barton Willmore was placed fifth in the table of Highest Earning UK Planning Consultancies for the year with a fee income of £18.5million, with Peter Brett Associates 12th with earnings of £9.6m.

"It is encouraging to see our partners doing well, particularly so in the planning sector," said Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent.

"The fact we have three such successful firms of consultants can only be good for the Kent economy as they will naturally cause others to look favourably on the county."

"Barton Willmore and Peter Brett Associates are located in two of our key development areas and their success reinforces the messages that these are prime business locations, while DHA's inclusion is a great reflection of what Maidstone, the County Town, has to offer businesses."

AIM FIRE SERVICES

Make sure your company's fire protection is up to date

EXPERTS at Aim Fire Services are offering their valuable help in the area of fire regulations.

Unfortunately the fire-related side of the training is not a regulated industry and there are companies out there who provide tick box training, which in most cases is not suitable for the individual or the company.

Due to non-regulation we have come across several companies who's Fire Warden or Fire Awareness training is wholly inadequate for the company's needs.

We at Aim Fire Services pride ourselves on quality training delivery, with practical scenarios specific to business needs such as residential care homes, offices, factories, large commercial organisations or to tailor any course specific to the company requirements.

Aim Fire Services is backing fire Minister Bob Neil's drive to make businesses in the South East aware of the forthcoming review and that they are aware what effects the devolution of power to local authorities and local communities will mean to the business community.

Essentially, the fire legislation affects those persons responsible for any premises in England and Wales where people live or work. The legislation covers nearly every type of building and open space except for anything on wheels, anything that flies, building sites, offshore installations, private homes and individual flats in a block or house, although communal areas will be affected.

On October 1, 2006, through the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005, (RRO) the responsibility for fire safety was handed to the responsible person, for instance managers, employers, self employed with premises, voluntary organisations, those responsible for buildings with public access and any contractor who has some control over any premises.

The responsible persons will have a duty to ensure the safety of everyone who uses their premises and those in the immediate vicinity who may be at risk if there is a fire. This will involve providing a suitable and sufficient Fire Risk Assessment (FRA) of the site and adequate training for staff.

The RRO is the biggest reform shake up in fire service legislation for almost 30 years. Any person responsible for premises must carry out a Fire Risk Assessment (FRA).

The Fire and Rescue Service will be the enforcing body and carry out inspections and audits. Failure to comply could lead to enforcement action or even prosecution.

In a company, the responsible person – usually a manager – will have to carry out the FRA of their premises. This can be done by themselves if they are competent to do so, or by using a competent member of staff who has suitable experience, sound knowledge of this area and had the relevant training, or by employing third party consultants such as Aim Fire Services. It is unlikely that internal company staff will have the necessary training or experience to qualify, so some companies will need to contact specialists.

Aim Fire Services can carry out your FRA, provide training for staff so companies can do their own assessment, act as a third party consultant and organise general training for Fire Wardens and Marshalls.

Aim Fire can also provide CoSHH awareness training, Manual Handling training (soon to be certified by the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health) and any related bespoke training required.

SUPPORT

Stars appreciate value of fostering

SINGER and TV star Gareth Gates is supporting this year's Foster Care Fortnight, the Fostering Network's annual recruitment and awareness campaign which brings together fostering services from throughout the UK to recruit foster carers and raise the profile of fostering.

The singer has thrown his support behind this year's campaign because he feels that, as the son of a foster carer, more people need to take up the mantle of caring for children. With 8,750 more foster families needed this year the campaign is more important than ever. Foster carers from all backgrounds and experiences are needed so that children with often complex needs and a wide variety of interests can be found the placement that will give them the best opportunity in the future.

Gareth said: "When I was growing up, I was always surrounded by lots of other children.

"In addition to my three sisters, my mum and dad fostered children. Over the years around 50 boys and girls of all ages, from different backgrounds have been a part of our family. My parents wanted to give other children some of the security and love that we had.

"Many of the kids who came into our family didn't have a great start in life and I know my mum and dad made a huge difference.

"I have seen first-hand, what a difference a foster carer can make on a child's life. That's why I'm supporting the Fostering Network with this year's Foster Care Fortnight."

Robert Tapsfield, chief executive of the Fostering Network, said: "As the son of foster carers, Gareth knows the extraordinary contribution that they make to society as whole but most importantly, the individual children that they help and nurture. We are absolutely delighted that Gareth is supporting the campaign and helping us raise awareness of the need for more foster carers."

Another celebrity to throw her support behind the Fostering Network's Foster Care Fortnight campaign is Oscar nominee Samantha Morton.

The film star, who spent time in the care system as a youngster, feels passionately that no child should be without a safe and secure environment in which to grow and develop.

"As a foster child myself I would not be where I am today without the people that were kind enough to help and care for me when others were unable. Please, please consider fostering a child."

Olympic Torch recognition for carers who go extra mile

WITH just a couple of months to go until the Olympic and Paralympic Games come to London, four foster carers, a daughter of a foster carer and one young person in care have been chosen to carry the Olympic torch as it tours Britain.

More than 7,300 torch bearers have been confirmed and will be carrying the flame through hundreds of cities, towns and villages up and down the country. The torch represents peace, unity and friendship and not many personify these qualities in the same way that foster carers, their families and children in care do.

Janie Ashton, has been fostering with her husband Jeff for the last eight years. During that time they have fostered 20 children, including many brothers and sisters.

Janie said of her selection for the relay: "It is a great honour to be chosen to carry the Olympic torch. It will carry a positive message from where it is lit in Greece to everyone who is witness to its passing.

"I was nominated for my work as a foster carer within my community.

"I am proud to have been recognised like this and I hope it shows those people who are thinking about becoming foster carers how every day can be different.

"One day it is making school lunches, the next day it's the Olympics. I feel I am carrying the torch on behalf of all foster carers. We are ordinary people doing an extraordinary job"

Janie's nomination read: "Through

She will carry the torch on July 24 in Richmond-Upon-Thames.

Fiona Berry, Foster Carer Association development manager at the Fostering Network, said: "Carrying the torch is a once in a lifetime opportunity for these inspirational people. It is very exciting knowing so many people involved in foster care have been chosen to take part in the torch relay. We all wish them every success."

In addition, Steve Thompson, a foster carer from Cornwall, also took part in the Olympic Village run which took place on March 31, finishing in the Olympic stadium.

THE INTERVIEW

Carl Palmer

No need for 'ELP in Carl's world

FOR almost the entire history of rock 'n' roll Carl Palmer has been providing the backbeat to a succession of top bands, writes Nick Ames.

From Chris Farlowe to Arthur Brown to the world's first super-group Emerson Lake and Palmer (ELP) and onto prog-rockers Asia, Palmer, born March 1950, has been recognized as a brilliant technician and a dynamic showman.

Later this month, he will be playing some classics from his back catalogue, along with a selection of other numbers at Sevenoaks' Stag Theatre with his three piece band.

"I've just come off a series of 18 European dates," said Palmer. "And I'm looking forward to it as it's a venue I have never played before."

"I shall be playing a one hour 50 minute show with some original material from ELP, some classical adaptations and Pictures at an Exhibition (compositions by classical musician Modest Mussorgsky recorded by ELP for a hit album).

"The Carl Palmer Band is instrumental rock, but on the cutting edge so it's very interesting."

"We have been playing to crowds with people from different age ranges, some are around my age, I'm 62, then there are their children in their 30s and sometimes a third generation of younger people as well."

"We have some grunge and metal fans, as although the music is instrumental it's not soft and delicate."

Palmer joined his first professional band aged just 14 and two years later he was playing with Chris Farlowe, alongside guitarist Albert Lee, who went on to play with Eric Clapton.

At the age of 18 he joined The Crazy World of Arthur Brown and played a US tour with the Grateful Dead and Jimi Hendrix.

A stint with Atomic Rooster followed as Palmer's reputation for virtuosity and speed with the sticks spread.

"Then I got a call from Tony Stratton-Smith, who was the manager of Keith Emerson, who was putting together a band," said Palmer.

Emerson was achieving success with The Nice while Greg Lake was riding high with In the Court of the Crimson King with its famous track 21st Century Schizoid Man – later covered by Ozzy Osbourne, sampled by Kanye West and used in the Guitar Hero computer game.

But the three joined forces to form ELP – a legend in rock music who defined the progressive rock genre and split opinion across the music world.

"Our first show was at the Plymouth Guildhall, ahead of the Isle of Wight Festival of August 1970," said Palmer.

"It only held about 430 people, so it was a pretty small venue. But we went down a storm and earned around £400."

Emerson had arranged for a cannon to go off during the performance and a member of the road crew had put double the charge inside it. The resulting explosion slightly injured an Italian cameraman.

Although the band's performance – alongside The Who, The Doors and Jimi Hendrix – has gone down in rock legend not all were impressed. Radio DJ John Peel branded it: "a tragic waste of time, talent and electricity".

Speaking about the festival, Palmer said: "I don't recall how well we played. All I know is that we went down incredibly well."

The following month the band released a self-titled debut album and the stage show became more and more elaborate.

In April 1974, ELP were on top of the bill during the California Jam Festival, pushing co-stars Deep Purple to second billing.

The trio's stage show was broadcast nationwide in the United States, and attended by more than 200,000 paying fans. By the end of 1974, ELP were rivalling The Rolling Stones and Led

On stage, the band exhibited an unorthodox mix of virtuoso musicianship and over-the-top theatrics. These included a Persian carpet, a grand piano spinning end-over-end, a rotating percussion platform, and a Hammond organ being thrown around to create feedback.

Emerson often used a knife given to him by Lemmy – of Hawkwind and most famously Motorhead who had roadied for The Nice – to force the keys on the organ to stay down and keep the sound going.

Follow up albums included Tarkus and Brain Salad Surgery as Palmer performed the world's first electric drum solo and grandiose projects such as the triple live album Welcome Back My Friends To The Show That Never Ends kept the band at the forefront of 70s rock.

But as musical fashions changed the band stopped performing and recording, with Palmer joining Asia – a group which included John Wetton of King Crimson, Rick Wakeman of Yes and Geoff Downes of The Buggles.

"Asia is still playing together and so I am in contact with many of the people I have performed with and had as my contemporaries – well those who are not dead."

"Keith and Greg it is more through accounts, there is not much to be said after 40 years but we played together a couple of years ago," said Palmer who is set to tour the USA with Asia later this year.

"I still really enjoy playing, this is what I have done all of my working life."

"I play around 97 concerts a year and even if it is seven nights in a row I do not have any problem getting up and playing as I love my art."

Palmer plays the Stag Theatre on Tuesday. He has also just announced an innovative new iTunes mobile app, Play Carl Palmer's Drums, developed by Dynamic Websites. This allows the user to download his drum kit and play along with fingers to any music playing through their iTunes program. Also included in the app is a myriad of rare Palmer archives and instant updates from his official website. Fans can purchase the app at the iTunes store.

Flavours of Kent

Tapas twist is a welcome change to this traditionally British institution

SET back from the lower Rainham road, small enough that you may miss it if whizzing past, lies a quaint building not in keeping with its surroundings whatsoever.

The Barn restaurant looks quite literally well, like, a barn thrust into the future from medieval times with its white walls and dark wooden beams.

But there are no roast dinners for a fiver or pensioners eat for free in this eatery that you may well find in others bearing the same name in Kent.

The touch of class hits you from the moment you open the door, modern décor and stylish tableware compliment the setting as you are lead through the intimate dining room and up a narrow set of stairs to the bar. The journey through is not ideal but makes the best of a small space.

Up in the roof bar we were served drinks on our comfy sofas and allowed good time to make our selections before we were called for dinner. Our host saw to our every need, making sure there was water on the table and cold drinks being poured as we arrived downstairs, relaxed and ready to devour.

Myself and my partner opted for what we had heard about so many months previously, the British style tapas.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Brilliantly served and skilfully presented using different slates, plates, copper tins and shot glasses, our five selections each at a total of £29.99 per person arrived.

As an amuse bouche we were handed a sharing platter of homemade breads, fried local sprats, a homemade prawn salad and confit lemon.

A number of the dishes were served with homemade crisps that blew away any salty packaged snack you could ever taste.

To start we went for the salmon cherville and spring onion fishcake, which was far larger than I expected but perfectly cooked.

My favourite part of the whole meal also came as a starter, the quail egg "scotched" in duck meat balanced on a seared black pudding. Again it was beautifully cooked with a mixture of flavours that make my mouth water again just writing this.

My other half went for the chicken boudin with pea and mint mousse, a cheeky trial let me taste the very different flavours that have been carefully chosen together.

Our final starter was the mustard, smoked apple infused Welsh rarebit, potato rosti which looked delightful but I had to leave that to my guest as I saved room for the middle course.

Along came the confit leg of Gressingham duck with apricot, ginger and rhubarb salsa. For what was meant to be a tapas, again I was pleasantly surprised by the large size of the duck portion. No hint of dryness and a very complimentary sauce made for an excellent dish.

Hold on, actually the next course was my favourite as the boar, sage and apple "toad in the hole" was brought to the table. Now this really was the British tapas I had been expecting, with the tiny Yorkshire pudding sitting atop a glass that hid the much larger boar sausage. Devoured in the blink of an eye without offering it to my guest says it all really.

Although she did have to contend with both the gammon, mustard and apple pie as well as the breast of chicken, chorizo and tomato dressing. Nods, winks and small tastes emphasised further excellence, with the gammon confirming itself as very much an unsung hero of the meal.

Our side dishes were also included in the price, a savoy cabbage with pancetta fricassee and chorizo, tomato and haricot bean cassoulet adding extra flavours but we probably over did on the meat dishes to be honest.

A delicious plate of home made brownie and chocolate sauce ended a meal fit for a British king, despite its Spanish orientation.

The relaxed atmosphere and attic bar and roof terrace would make The Barn a perfect location for further drinks long into the summer night and all for just over £88.

There are other options with the tasting menu and more traditional dishes available. Whatever you go for, a trip to The Barn in Rainham is a must.

King of the one liners Carr has brought his new tours to Kent venues on a number of occasions and often uses the gigs as a tester before larger stadium shows. Gagging Order, if it is anything like his other stand-up shows, will be packed full of stories, jokes and audience banter. Be warned, do not heckle him. Not scared of a bit of controversy, Carr is almost certain to approach subjects that no-one else would dare.

Stand-up of some stature Stewart Lee

Assembly Hall Theatre, Tunbridge Wells

Friday, June 1
www.assemblyhalltheatre.co.uk

HAVING just played a sold-out twelve week London season to over 30,000 people at Leicester Square Theatre, Stewart Lee brings his new show, Carpet Remnant World, to Kent.

What can a middle-aged, married man, whose life now consists mainly of watching Scooby Doo cartoons with a four-year-old boy, possibly find to write comedy about? Formerly stand-up's youthful iconoclast, Lee explains how he now "gawps blankly at News 24 as Britain burns down around him, and blinks weirdly at the vast wayside retail outlets during endless journeys to and from increasingly indistinct provincial theatres." Once he lived on the pleasure planet. Now he is trapped in Carpet Remnant World.

SLEEP tight when you snuggle up in a natural fibre duvet on a hand crafted bed, writes Gary Wright.

Duvets are normally made with man-made fibres or feathers, but one British couple has successfully used wool to make something special for the bedroom.

Husband and wife team Dick and Pauline Beijen bought their sheep during the summer of 2008 as the first step into their idea to create high quality, all natural woollen duvets, the challenge being to make a duvet which most importantly draped and behaved like a duvet (unlike a woollen quilt).

After months of development work filmed by Channel 4 in Monty Don's series My Dream Farm, Devon Duvets was born, promising "the softest, purest, and warmest ambience".

"The concept of using British wool in duvets and pillows was largely unthought of at that time and we are delighted that there is now a resurgence of interest in this wonderful, abundant British material," said Dick.

Devon Duvets now produces a range of high quality British Woollen duvets, pillows and mattress toppers from standard sizes to bespoke, adults to children; all individually handcrafted using materials of the highest quality.

"We are committed to creating totally unique and natural pillows, duvets and mattress toppers, which are sustainable and have a low carbon footprint; even their packaging and labels are produced in Britain."

From one new British success story to another: Frank Hudson, has 60 years of experience

through three generations by one family.

Frank Hudson Ltd is acknowledged to be a leading specialist in the design and production of vintage furniture to the highest specifications. Inspired by such historic names as Chippendale and Sheraton.

The import of inferior-quality and replica products by large businesses has forced many smaller skilled British manufacturers to cease trading. In tackling this problem at its source and transferring its manufacturing operations to dedicated and closely monitored partners in the Far East and Eastern Europe, Frank Hudson has refused to compromise on the standards demanded by its original founder.

In this way, Frank Hudson has been able to secure continuing production of exquisite furniture of the highest quality and all designed in Britain at affordable prices.

Supervision of the overseas manufacturing bases and of production to Frank Hudson's standards is maintained by an almost constant presence of at least one of the third generation Hudson brothers Tim, James and Tom who were determined to maintain their rich heritage.

Frank Hudson will be showing its out-of-this-world Shakespeare four-poster at The Great British Home Show 2012 at Glow, Bluewater from May 31 to June 4.

Both Frank Hudson and Devon Duvets, along with British mattress manufacturers Hypnos and Relyon will be part of the Great British Bedrooms section of the show. There will also be sections devoted to gardens, home improvement, furniture, food and drink as well as an indoor street party to celebrate the Jubilee, with English wine provided by Chapel Down Vineyards.

Experts will be there each day in the How-To Theatre, demonstrating everything from getting the best from your tiling and wallpapering to making the most of your garden, including a presentation by TV presenter and author Alys Fowler. Celebrity DIYer Craig Phillips will also be at the show, along with DIY SOS' Oliver Heath.

Find out more about Frank Hudson beds and Devon Duvets at www.britishbedsworldwide.com which is hosting the Great British Bedrooms section of The Great British Home Show 2012.

BEAUTY: It's such a shame it was raining on the day of advert filming, the blossom was beautiful

LUCY'S PATCH

by LUCY HEWETT

THE London Marathon is done – so what's next? It was an amazing event to take part in; the crowds cheering you along every step of the way, calling your name. I raised more than £2,100 for Age UK thanks to some very generous friends and family.

The day after the marathon I filmed an advert for Hovis, The Great British Sandwich, when I talked about fruit and veg from The Garden of England. It was quite a full-on day, especially having to bend to attend to my seedlings for a couple of takes – I said you're lucky I can walk let alone bend. It's just a shame it rained all day.

Talking of rain, it is very difficult to sit here looking out at the persistent drizzle and talk to you about water saving techniques.

I am sure you will all have been taking notes from the news as he has told us what to do to save water, and you have all paid vast sums of money on extra water butts to catch as much rainwater as possible.

With that taken care of we need to think about anything else we can do: mulching is a great way of helping to keep the moisture locked in, and incorporating some drought resistant plants into your planting schemes will help as they have low moisture and maintenance demands.

I'm a big fan of these anyway as I am not a manic waterer so I do like a plant to be able to tolerate the harshest of conditions that is the Hewett garden.

There are many lists of plants that are suitable for drought conditions, but here are a just a few of my favourites: Lavandula (Lavender); Hebe; Papaver somniferum (Oriental Poppy); Ceanothus (California lilac); Osteospermum jucundum; Euphorbia (be careful to make sure the one you choose is not invasive); Eryngium; Echinops; Cosmos bipinnatus; Nigella damascena; Gazania; Eschscholzia californica (California poppy); Stipa gigantea; Pennisetum rubrum; Briza media; Pelargonium; Verbena bonariensis; Iris; Alliums; Agapanthus; Buddleja (Butterfly bush); Fatsia Japonica; Sedum – to name a few – once you start planting you will be convinced these well behaved plants are the way to go.

Remember, it's best to buy them small, so giving them a chance to acclimatise as they develop, also look for silver or grey-green leafed plants, their light leaf colour reflects the harsh rays of the sun (fingers crossed) some also have a fine coating of hairs on the leaves or stems helping to trap moisture. Don't forget to give them and the ground a good soaking when planting to give them the best start possible.

to save on water

Pick blackspot leaves off roses before they spread; wipe off greenfly and blackfly armies with your fingers. Dead-head regularly to ensure further blooms.

Plant out summer bedding plants, if not already done, to give colour through to the first frosts. Plant out dahlias once the risk of frost has passed.

Cut back dead bulb foliage if not already done, wait until the foliage dies down naturally as cutting back too early can lead to no flowers next year. Lift and divide overcrowded clumps of bulbs once they have finished flowering.

Spring flowering shrubs can be pruned when over, to encourage next year's growth.

Stake tall perennials to avoid wind damage.

Cut back and deadhead Oriental poppies, after flowering, right back to ground level you will stimulate growth and may even get some new blooms from these gorgeous flowers. Mulch and feed them too.

If you are feeling very organised and want to grow your own spring bedding for next year you will need to sow these before July.

Inspect lilies for the scarlet lily beetle whose larvae can strip plants in days.

Grow your own

Strawberries Grow these in hanging baskets or anywhere off the ground, they will be easier to pick and slugs and snails can't eat them but net them if outside or the birds will.

Other fruit: thin out plums and apples to prevent broken branches and help remaining fruit get larger.

Potatoes Harvest new potatoes when plants are in full flower. I think that calls for a very quick and tasty potato salad – just boil potatoes with skins on, drain, once cooled stir in sour cream, mayo, chives and season. Also harvest lettuce and spring onions; radish; beetroot (don't forget to sow some more for consecutive salad crop); summer cabbage and early carrots.

Tomatoes I had a bit of bad luck with blight in my polytunnel, so I now put tomatoes in grow bags but instead of planting them in a row as the bag suggests, I give the bag a bit of a bash to loosen the compost then cut it into two equal halves. I then stand them on end and plant the tomato into each half so the tomato has more compost to grow in a sort of bag/pot.

Once plants get going remove any side shoots as they appear; keeping one main stem which should be tied to a supporting cane. You have to keep on top of these unruly beasts or left unattended they will be out of control. Feed weekly once the first trusses of fruit have set.

Sow French and runner beans, maincrop peas, beetroot, carrots, swedes, turnips, cauliflowers, chicory, kohlrabi, sweetcorn, courgette, marrow, cucumber, squash.

No matter what the seed packet says I always plant all my seeds in pots in the greenhouse first as I have tried on many occasions to plant them direct outside and they never come up. I think I have too many little visitors in my garden so I would rather do the work inside first, get them established and then plant them out. The only exception to that is runner beans where I just put two or three seeds in the hole and hope the mice leave me at least one.

Plant out Broccoli, calabrese, Brussel sprouts, summer cabbage, French and runner beans, leeks, celery and outdoor tomatoes. Shade your greenhouse to prevent scorch.

So I will wrap up by trying to convince you that you are very lucky, jolly lucky to have such varied weather in this country enabling us to grow such a range of beautiful plants and flowers, have I convinced you?

I don't have to convince myself because I am (quite a rarity I fear these days) someone who loves England and all its weather. I do have trouble convincing my husband Terry what a wonderful place it is when the rain has not stopped for two weeks, but hopefully by the time you read this the sun will have graced us with her presence again and I will once again have a happy brown-faced husband.

Bold chairs make a colourful statement to grace any room

SOMETIMES a single piece of furniture can transform a room, providing a beautiful centrepiece that grabs attention, writes Gary Wright.

STYLE: The chairs combine fabric and leather to grab your attention

For many designers it is the single detail in a room that makes the difference and there is little to match that special chair and the new Wanted Collection by glimpze which is sure to be on many people's wish list.

All are hand-made in beechwood, generously upholstered, then French polished by British craftsmen.

The Wanted Collection was launched initially with six art form chairs "each of which tells a different story," says Michael Wiley, the man behind the innovative company.

The collection has been supplemented by a new range of leopard and cowhide chairs – and there are new two-seaters as well, which will be shown for the first time later this month at The Great British Home Show 2012.

Michael said: "These chairs stand tall and impressive, with a blend of designer splendour, timeless wools and rich faux-leather fabrics making them sumptuous chairs which are both tactile and supremely comfortable."

"Displaying their cascade of strong colours and patterns, they will grace any room and never lose their power to amaze."

The glimpze furniture will be on show at The Great British Home Show 2012 at Glow, Bluewater.

Gabrielle Fagan discovers the high price world of celebrity nurseries

SINGER Beyonce and her husband Jay-Z have reportedly splashed out £1 million on their new baby's nursery, including a diamante encrusted high chair especially for daughter Blue Ivy Carter.

Of course every baby is a star in its proud parents' eyes – but celebrities certainly like to give theirs the red-carpet treatment from the moment they're born.

When it comes to creating a nursery, nothing but the best will do and no luxurious detail is overlooked, whether it's furniture embellished with glittering crystals, elaborate fantasy murals, or exquisite hand-built furniture.

As well as a miniature pink bath, studded with 45,000 Swarovski crystals, and matching high chair (£10,000), they're also said to have picked up a solid gold rocking horse.

And while very few people have that sort of cash to splash – it can be good fun to see what tips you can pick up when kitting out your own home ready for a new member of the family to take up residence.

"It's certainly not unusual for those with wealth and status to opt for the 'wow' factor," says Lizzie Mackey, senior designer at nursery boutique Dragons of Walton Street, London, which boasts many celebrity clients.

"This is a room on which people lavish a huge amount of care, attention and money. And they want it to match the rest of their home and style.

"They view a nursery as a particularly special space. After all, it's their child's first view of the world, so getting it right is incredibly important to them."

On-trend parents are opting for more colour and personality in their rooms, and moving away from neutrals, she says. There's a desire to create out-of-this-world settings, often featuring hand-painted murals.

"One of my favourite nurseries had a cot upholstered to resemble a fluffy cloud, with drapes hung with crystal droplets to replicate rain drops, and we created a mural to resemble a glowing pink sunrise and sky. It cost around £90,000."

The company furnished a nursery for singer Lily Allen, whose daughter, Ethel Mary, was born in November. It supplied pieces hand-decorated with ladybirds and bumblebees.

"She fell in love with a fabric which featured garden insects and we worked around that theme. It was colourful and magical, but very peaceful," she says.

"People love bespoke details. For Elton John's baby son we made a miniature chair featuring musical notes. Clients view crafted bespoke pieces as heirlooms which can be handed down through the generations."

Even if your budget isn't celebrity-sized, you can be inspired by the style of Beyonce, Victoria Beckham, Mariah Carey and Christina Aguilera. Create a knock-out nursery for your VIB (Very Important Baby) with our pick of best buys for baby.

The R&B singer Beyonce and her rapper husband Jay-Z are not known as the King and Queen of Bling for nothing, and their three nurseries sparkle with style, crystals and chandeliers.

"When my client is someone who 'models' nappies and takes naps the majority of the day, a room should be simple but stunning," says interior designer Lori Gardner who spent months creating the Swarovski crystal-studded baby bath for the couple.

Chill your drink, don't dilute it

THE Great British Home Show is not just about the dramatic changes, is also about the little touches that make life better – take for example Whisky Stones.

The cubes are hewn from Swedish granite that can stand extreme cold – and heat – which you drop into any drink and keep it chilled without it being diluted as it would as ice melted.

Use the Whisky Stones in your drink then rinse and re-use, time and time again.

Whisky aficionados will appreciate the effect that ensures their favourite tipple remains undiluted but they are also perfect for white wine, brandy... in fact any drink you wish to chill without altering its flavour.

The beautifully-crafted two centimetre cubes can stand extreme heat as well, so mulled wine, hot toddies and sake lovers will find an additional use for these attractive marbled stones.

"Your drink will remain chilled without watering down the taste ensuring the pure taste of the drink remains until the final drop," said Phil Jackson, sales director of Viking Stones.

Viking Stones will be exhibiting at The Great British Home Show 2012 adding another set of great ideas for showgoers to sample.

Supplied in gift packs with nine cubes and a black velvet storage pouch, Whisky Stones are just one of its range of excellent gift and home ideas, which also include Himalayan salt lamps and candle holders.

The Great British Home Show 2012 will be at Glow, Bluewater, from May 31 to June 4. More details at www.gbhomeshow.co.uk

Landlords support squatting law change

THE Landlord Syndicate, a network of companies providing a support centre for landlords, says it is relieved at the news that squatting is to become a criminal offence as of September.

One member of syndicate who has fought for some time to enforce this law, even supporting a campaign presented to Parliament in April 2011, is Paul Shamplina, the founder of Landlord Action.

He said: "Squatting cases have been on the rise for some time now, many by organised gangs whom have travelled thousands of miles to engage in squatting knowing they will be protected by the law.

"It was only when some high-profile cases hit the headlines that people sat up and took notice of the growing injustice on homeowners."

Squatters will now face up to a £5,000 fine and a six-month prison sentence if they take up residence in another person's property.

But The Landlord Syndicate is warning landlords not to be complacent.

Mr Shamplina said: "Enforcing a law does not mean that the activity of squatting will be eradicated, it just means there are tougher measures to deal with it which should prevent landlords and homeowners having to enter into lengthy and expensive legal battles."

Development offers quality and style near town centre

JONES Homes is back in Rochester with a new town centre development.

With the sales office at Ruxton Square open from Thursday to Monday, prospective buyers can discuss the plans for this development with the sales team.

Ruxton Square is a development of two, three and four-bedroom homes located within easy walking distance of Rochester town centre and station.

The development boasts close attention to detail with traditional exteriors that complement those of the period properties in the neighbouring conservation area, contemporary interiors, a high-quality specification and the sense of quality that all home buyers appreciate.

Prices start at £155,000 for a two-bedroom home and from £205,000 for a three-bedroom property.

"Jones Homes has been operating in Kent for more than 15 years and we've built developments in Rochester before.

"Our excellent reputation for building high-quality homes means we've already had plenty of enquiries for the new homes at Ruxton Square," said Sara Stanhope, sales and marketing director for Jones Homes Southern.

"At Ruxton Square, buyers will have the opportunity to buy a traditional-style house, but enjoy all the benefits of buying new, including a 10-year structural warranty and the chance to have a blank 'canvas' that can be personalised according to their own taste and style."

For further information on Ruxton Square, Rochester, please call the Jones Homes' sales team on 01322 619750 from Thursday to Monday inclusive, 10am to 5.30pm or visit the website on www.jones-homes.co.uk.

Dragon to fire up property businesses

JAMES Caan is famous as one of the leading dragon's on BBC's Dragons Den, but the former TV star has recently revealed he is interested in helping property investors to start up.

Using his company Hamilton Bradshaw as his venture capital vehicle, Caan hopes to take advantage of the growing property market slump by backing 12 property start-ups.

He hopes to create a multifaceted company with an equity value of roughly £500 million, by using a similar formula to that used on Dragons Den where he will put an equity stake into 12 property businesses in exchange for giving them the capital and his expertise to start up.

Caan is also aiming to back companies whom each have different qualities.

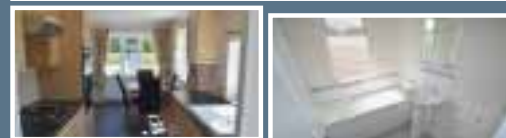

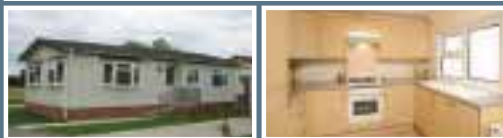

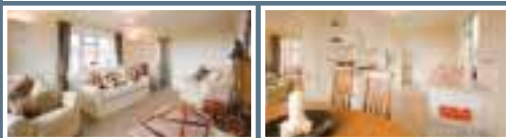

From property agents to interior designers to property developers, the entrepreneur wants to back 12 businesses which are different, but will all compliment each other

By Steve Loader

PORSCHE has a new generation Boxster on sale – the third in a line established in 1996.

The newcomer is certain to reiterate the Boxster's status as the benchmark open-top two-seater or roadster.

It's hardly surprising when you realise the original car was designed from the ground up to be a roadster, the first time Porsche had done this since the legendary 550 Spyder of the early '50s, which was designed for competition.

Some roadsters are still created from coupés, but often compromised in terms of rigidity and by extra weight needed for strengthening.

Porsche did it the other way around, later creating a 'Boxster Coupé' in the form of the 2005 Cayman, which followed the launch of the second generation Boxster (2004-11).

As with its 911 supercar big brother, Porsche has ensured the latest Boxster is visually derived from its predecessor; but while generations one and two were almost identical, the new car's all-new lightweight body has a distinctive look with sweeping lines leading into the trademark air intakes ahead of the rear wheel and highlighting the mid-engine layout that gives the Boxster such poise and balance.

Drawing attention to those intakes makes the car look more aggressive, adding to a more purposeful stance this time around, to complement a revised chassis.

A new fully electric hood opens to reveal a distinctive and typically stylish Porsche interior with more space and a centre console inspired by the German marque's Carrera GT supercar.

New Boxster prices start from £37,589, with the Boxster S flagship from £45,384, and the line-up has new horizontally-opposed or boxer engines that echo the car's name.

The Boxster's 265bhp 2.7-litre is 10bhp more powerful than its predecessor's 2.9 unit and is now based on the 315bhp 3.4 in its Boxster S sister. Both engines come with a manual six-speed gearbox as standard, with Porsche's seven-speed dual-clutch PDK auto-manual 'box as an option.

It is the latter that delivers ultimate performance, allowing the 2.7-litre Boxster to hit 62mph in 5.5 seconds, with the Boxster S needing just 4.8.

The new Boxster is not only impressive looking, but the body is up to 35kg lighter according to model, while a 60mm longer wheelbase with shortened overhangs front and back, plus widened track on both axes should add to stability and agility.

Porsche says the latest Boxster S lapped the testing German Nürburgring-Nordschleife race circuit in 7:58 minutes – lopping 12 seconds off the time clocked by its predecessor.

But even Porsche has to admit it can't all be about performance nowadays, so while the new faster range is also more fuel efficient, by up to 15 per cent. Official combined fuel consumption for the Boxster with PDK is 36.7mpg – the Boxster S with PDK returns 35.3mpg combined.

A THING OF BEAUTY: Porsche's new Boxster looks more aggressive than its predecessor boasting a fully electric hood, larger interior and lighting body giving it more fuel efficiency

DON'T LIKE

...the price. Everyone should be able to afford a Boxster but, then again, exclusivity is part of the ownership experience and good for residuals.

NOT SURE

... buyers need to pay extra for the Boxster S. Past generations show that any Boxster flatters the driver and flattens the opposition

REALLY LIKE

... how Porsche has, as usual, sharpened the looks of the latest generation yet ensured that it is instantly recognisable as a Boxster.

For all things Porsche.

Freelander 2 has got what it takes, both on and off the road

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

LAND Rover's Freelander 2 suffered tough love from me after its launch in 2006, but I softened in the end.

Not that the UK 4x4 icon's robust looking junior model really needs an easy ride, but my offish manner was more down to the failings of the Mark 1 Freelander.

That car's adherence – literally – to Land Rover's off-roading heritage was impressive, but I couldn't love a car styled to shout 'rugged and dependable' when it wimped out so often through flaky build and poor reliability.

I can remember the sainted Clarkson reviewing the original car at launch and questioning whether it would be reliable; the then LR marketing chief said he was so confident that it would stay the course that JC could come round and burn his house down if it failed – the bloke must be living in a cardboard box under the arches now, because Top Gear's enfant terrible closed the report by waving a box of matches at the camera.

Fortunately, the bigger Freelander 2 has shown it really can 'walk the talk' as a quality runabout, building site/rural workhorse and ideal 4x4 for outward bound and alpine holidays.

It's dearer than most compact 4x4s, but you get genuine off-road power – rivals are usually little more than 'soft-utility', more politely labelled SUVs (sports utility vehicles).

Unlike bigger Land Rovers, the Freelander does not have low ratios, but the low down power of the 2.2-litre turbodiesel and several driving aids, plus the Hill Descent Control feature introduced on the original Freelander, is enough to boost and control the car up and down steep slopes by cleverly assigning traction individually to the four wheels as required.

I proved the point before at a Land Rover Experience Centre, crashing up and down steep slopes slippery with mud and littered with flinty boulders.

IT'S ROUGH AND READY:

By making the Freelander 2 bigger Land Rover has shown that it can really 'walk the talk' with genuine off-road power, but still has good on-road quality

The car also romped through the site's 'elephant's footprints'; craters and hillocks that show how Land Rovers can balance diagonally on just two wheels without being halted or twisted by the terrain.

Unlike its predecessor, there was no creaking from dodgy interior fittings.

Of course, most 4x4 buyers never pose such a stern test, even if that's like buying a pair of wellies and wearing them as slippers, but it proves the Freelander's prowess in any conditions including snow and ice.

And it is not as if the car's superb but little used off-road ability compromises its on-road qualities: it handles tidily and comfortably with little body roll on the bends.

Steering feedback is good too – you need it off-road as much as on. Though larger than the old car, it also feels nimble.

The diesel's off-road clout works equally well on-road and it is impressively refined. There is also a greener option for our hard and environmentally-conscious times – front-wheel drive only versions from £22,250-33,000.

The Freelander interior is comfortable and finished to a high standard whatever the spec, though workmanlike rather than stylish – the Freelander can now comfortably leave the flashy stuff to its new Range Rover Evoque stablemate.

Comfort levels are good front and back with a good high-up view from the cabin and a decent boot space for luggage behind that.

Power comes from a range-wide 2.2-litre four-cylinder turbodiesel, available in 150bhp and 190bhp outputs – with the latter available only with a six-speed automatic.

In all cases, performance is lively for a car of this size and bulk while full consumption is surprisingly good, with the manual 150bhp test car capable of an official combined 45.6mpg.

MOTORING NEWS

Skyactiv adds more to Mazda

MAZDA this week launched not just an all-new crossover/SUV, but also new technologies and design templates.

Priced from £21,395, the CX-5 features Skyactiv: car design and production concentrating on a lightweight chassis and advanced powertrains.

RANGE Rover's eye-catching Evoque has added to its impressive sack of awards by landing the coveted Diesel Car of the Year 2012 title.

Diesel Car editor Ian Robertson said of the overall award winner: "It looks sensational, is neatly kitted out, has exemplary road manners and comes with a price tag that doesn't usually grace a Range Rover-badged product."

Suzuki makes a MOT splash

ANALYSIS of 24.5 million MOT records by the honestjohn.co.uk website showed one in five cars registered in 2008 failed their first MOT, with testers most likely to fail cars from French firms.

However, the survey delivered a big plus for Japanese marque Suzuki, whose Splash mini-MPV proved to be the three-year-old least likely to fail at the first MOT fence.

Chevrolet's popularity shifts up a gear in UK

AMERICAN DREAMER: Chevrolet's MPV's the Orlando (far left) and the Spark city car have proved very popular with British buyers, offering high specifications with excellent prices

CHEVROLET has come a long way in just a few years in the UK, but it's not so surprising when you know it's the number one brand with General Motors – one of the world's biggest car-makers.

Founded in 1911 by talented Swiss-American racing driver and motor engineer Louis Chevrolet, the brand is a giant at home, where it secured more than a third of the market last year.

It also features heavily in American culture, music and films, getting a name check in Don McLean's nostalgic song American Pie, and creating icons like the Corvette and Camaro sporting models.

The UK story is shorter though, starting with General Motors' (GM) takeover of the former Daewoo Motors of Korea. By 2005, the former Daewoo range had become Chevrolet with the distinctive bow-tie badge.

Dave Faulkner, business manager and controller for the Perrys group Chevrolet dealership at Whitfield, Dover, said it's been quite a ride since then.

"I can't believe how much the brand has come on. I started with it at the former St George's dealership in Margate in 2005, and watched the line-up and quality boom," he said.

"This year we've seen the all-new Aveo arrive

– the first GM car to get the new small car platform to be seen later on the next Vauxhall Corsa – and also the amazing Volt hybrid, which is really an electric car without the range anxiety thanks to its own small onboard petrol engine recharging the batteries.

"We've also got a real halo car arriving soon – the Chevy Camaro muscle car.

"But I get excited by what we have to offer across the range, in terms of product and full NCAP safety spec.

"I think customers are attracted also by the mystique of a brand closely linked with US culture though, in tough times, there's no doubt many like the keen price and five-year warranty; Aveos start at £9,995 for a smart supermini that drives well, but we also offer high spec Spark Plus city cars at £6,770 for those needing mobility at bargain basement prices.

"At the other extreme, we've been offering the high spec Orlando LTZ diesel – a good looking and distinctive seven-seat MPV that's also practical – with £4,000 off at £17,975. Another seven-seater, our big Captiva LTZ diesel SUV, can also be had for £6,500 less at £24,865.

"But our best offer is a £6,500 saving on a high spec Cruze 2.0 diesel saloon, now just £12,960, and all these include factory sat nav."

RUGBY LEAGUE

Dragons looking to roar on the Broncos in Super League clash

By Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

THIS weekend marks a major milestone for rugby league in the south with the visit of Super League giants London Broncos and Hull FC to Gillingham's Priestfield Stadium.

It's all the more pleasing for everyone involved at Kent's only rugby league side the Medway Dragons, based in Gillingham, whose players and supporters will be packing the Rainham End for the game which kicks off at 2pm on Sunday.

Most good ideas are born out of a discussion around a table in a pub, almost exclusively involving alcohol, but the for the Dragons, it was 12 men drinking tea and coffee who launched their dream of rugby league in the town a mere five years ago.

Their first training session involved just a handful of youngsters, and now they have teams of all ages, girls and boys, and have this season started a wheelchair team for the first time.

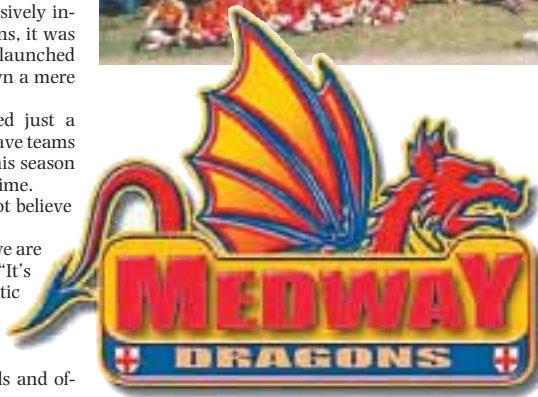

Chairman John Stanforth still cannot believe where the club has come from.

"We started off with no players and we are now running all these teams," he said. "It's been mad in a good way. It's fantastic that so many people have bought into what we are trying to do. None of this would be possible without the amount of people who have put up their hands and offered their time and experience."

Their success has even caught the eye of the sport's governing body, who offered to fast track the club from their regional amateur status to Championship level, which is a step below the Super League.

But while Mr Stanforth appreciates the sentiment he feels the club needs more time.

"What we have managed to create here has been down to our own time scale, nobody else's, we don't want to jeopardise what we have managed to build up," he said. "Further down the line it's going to be a whole different ball game, it would be something completely different."

PACKED:

The Dragons' players and fans will be roaring on the Broncos at Priestfield on Sunday.

Another co-founder is Tim Holland, who helps coach. He said the club prides itself on making sure everyone gets the play, and cited a recent example of how it differs to other sports.

"We had one lad, he had been playing football locally, but he wasn't the football shape, so they just stuck him in goal," he said. "Basically he went to football and got cold, now he plays rugby league and he's never looked back."

"Unless it's a play-off game or cup game every-one who says they will turn up will play, we never play the best team every week."

There are sure to be a number of spectators for whom it will be their first experience of the game, so here is a guide to get you through the match:

- There are 13 players per team, and 4 subs.
- Each team has six tackles or chances to score.
- If after six tackles they haven't scored the ball is handed over.
- It is played over two halves of 40 minutes.
- Four points for a try, followed by two points for a conversion, or for a penalty, and then one point for a drop goal.

IT'S NOT JUST A NORTHERN THING

IT'S a common belief that Rugby League is an alien concept for anyone south of Watford junction.

But the Dragons' community coach Mark Roughsedge couldn't disagree more, having seen first hand the passion for the game in Medway after moving south from Warrington, where it is treated like a religion.

He has worked for the past two years spreading the game into local schools and developing new sections of the club, having previously worked at his beloved Warrington Wolves.

"A couple of my friends have come down and they think it's amazing," he said. "A lot of people up north think it's just the London Broncos down south, what they don't know about is the amount of clubs in the area, they don't see the passion about the game."

"Everyone I have brought down here with that attitude has certainly gone back impressed."

"It's the best sport in the world, it's my religion."

"It could be the start of something special. People who go to watch it for the first time won't be disappointed."

MOTORSPORT

Host of racing stars set to appear in German touring car series at Brands

BRANDS Hatch is set for a German invasion this weekend as well as welcoming a Kent-born driver who has found fame on the continent.

The DTM Championship, which exclusively features Audis, BMWs, and Mercedes doing in excess of 100mph, takes place at the circuit this weekend, and in doing so brings Gary Paffett back to British tarmac.

The man from Bromley has been a revelation in the DTM series, and is currently its most successful active driver, with 19 wins to his name. He has won the series once, back in 2005 while also finishing runner-up three times.

After a successful opening few rounds the Mercedes driver, who is also a test driver for the McLaren F1 team, is at the top of the drivers leader board, 13 points ahead of nearest rival, another Brit, and team mate Jamie Green.

DTM is a popular destination for former F1 drivers, with BBC commentator David Coulthard and Ralf Schumacher both driving for Mercedes, whilst moving in the opposite direction, 2010 DTM champion Paul Di Resta used the series as a career stepping-stone.

The F1 connection continues in the supporting VW Scirocco R-Cup race on Saturday, with 1996 World Champion Damon Hill making his first racing appearance since the 1999 Japanese Grand Prix. He'll be racing alongside friends Mark Blundell, Martin Donnelly, Julian Bailey, Perry McCarthy and David Brabham, all of whom appeared in the sport's top flight.

For autograph hunters the list doesn't stop there, as Jenson Button will be stopping by the circuit at 11am on Sunday to meet fans and do a live question and answer session.

He will then take the wheel of a Mercedes-Benz DTM 'race taxi' alongside Paffett to do a lap of the track for the first time since his British F3 days in 1999.

BMW, who return to the DTM this year after a 20-year absence, will present a strong challenge to the Mercedes-Benz pairing, after an amazing comeback win last time out at the Lausitzring with Canadian driver Bruno Spengler.

Touring car legend Andy Priaulx, a three-time World Touring Car Champion, has a successful record at Brands Hatch. "I can't wait to drive Brands Hatch for the first time in a DTM car," he said. "There are going to be a lot of laps in the race, so there is not going to be any space between the cars and this will make it quite an intense sort of circuit to drive."

Physios prepare to get Gills fighting fit for new season

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

IF THERE are any physios who were put through their paces more than those at Gillingham this season then they must be robotic.

The men in the treatment room at Priestfield have had to deal with the staggering number of injuries, shown in the table to the right, which left former boss Andy Hessenthaler with a predictably inconsistent line-up.

The majority of injuries were sustained in matches and because of that it was out of the hands of physios Steve Allen and James Barker.

But they know things need to be different for next season and have already drawn up a sports science regime that it's hoped will keep more players off the casualty list.

"We have been unlucky, it's just cost us at a difficult time," said Allen.

"No-one went back and broke down because we made sure they got through the rehab."

He feels that possibly having less pre-season games this summer might reduce the risk of injuries throughout the season.

"We had 12 last year," he said. "It was difficult because he (Hessenthaler) needed to see them play, that's why he gave them the opportunity."

"It got us off to a flying start, but we got a little bit fatigued at times. That's probably something we need to look at."

"And maybe get the double sessions back at the start of the season: have a cardio-vascular session in the morning, and strength and power in the afternoon and injury prevention."

GILLINGHAM'S TEAM OF CROCKS
Player	Injury	Games missed	Suspended
Danny Kedwell	Big toe, cracked ribs, hamstring	5
Danny Jackman	Knee, hamstring strain	6
Chris Whelpdale	Illness, stitches, calf and groin injuries	8
Jack Payne	Knee ligaments, twice, hamstring	16
Ross Flitney	Knee surgery	11
Charlie Lee	Ankle, shin, and back	8	6
Lewis Montrose	Illness	1	6
Andy Frampton	Illness, ankle	13	1
Jo Kuffour	Illness, patella tendonitis	6
Gary Richards	Hamstring, toe, broken leg	12
Matt Lawrence	Knee	2	1
Curtis Weston	Thigh strain, knee surgery	14
Matt Fish	Groin strain, ankle	14
Simon King	Knee	9
Gavin Tomlin	Hamstring tear, knee.	13
Danny Spiller	Ankle and ankle surgery	13	3

"It's about getting the balance right. You have got to be an athlete first and a footballer second these days. Years ago you never used to get all these injuries, but the game has got so much quicker and the demands are so much greater on the body."

One player not on the list is striker Adam Birchall who damaged his knee in a friendly against Welling United in July, but he is on the road to recovery and may well have featured in the play-offs had Gillingham made it.

HOPEFUL: Jack Green wants place at Olympics

Green confident of his path to the top – and it's all thanks to his mum

IF THERE'S one thing Olympic hopeful Jack Green doesn't suffer from it's a lack of confidence – something he can blame his mum for.

The 20-year-old who is hoping to represent Team GB in the 400m and 4x400m relay in east London this summer was just a youngster when the first seeds of fearlessness started growing in his mind.

It's the kind of confidence that has taken him to the top of the sport despite his age, having last summer been crowned under-23 European champion as well as appearing in the semi-finals of the World Championships in South Korea, which by his own admission wasn't good enough.

Looking back at it now it's easy for the Maidstone-born man to see where his confidence comes from.

"My mum's job was building self-esteem in kids," he said. "I believe that probably rubbed off on me a little bit too much. She wasn't very confident when she was younger, she didn't want me ending up like that."

And Green certainly hasn't, as he continues to thrive in the spotlight in an industry which he believe lacks confidence.

He said: "Athletes are a little bit boring, but I'm just trying to create a nice atmosphere, because with the training we are boring people most of the time, because we train so hard we have got to be so focused."

It's been an intense year for Green who has more than doubled his training schedule to get ready for the biggest event of his life.

"I'm in great shape, a lot better than last year. I'm just looking forward to getting the quick times," he said. "I don't like talking times, if I don't run considerably quicker I will be very disappointed."

"Winning a major championship is a major thing, it's totally worth it for the 11 months of training, six times a week, four hours a day to run under 50 seconds – it's strange saying it like that."

"I have got an Olympic Games this year, I don't need any motivation. It's the biggest competition in the world. If you can't get motivated when you have got that around the corner, you're going to struggle."

Tour of East Africa beckons for trio of county's top players

THREE players from Kent have been chosen to represent the England Counties side on a tour of Africa next month.

Blackheath forwards Joe Bonner and James Cleverly, and Westcombe Park's forward James Lindfield, are part of the 26-man squad that will play three matches in Uganda and Kenya.

It's the largest tour undertaken by the country's county representative side as on their trip they will be carrying out coaching sessions and visits to raise the profile of rugby in their host nations.

The squad plays both Uganda and a combined East Africa side in Kampala before taking on the challenge of an East Africa Invitation XV in Nairobi.

Team manager Michael Old said: "Selection has been particularly tough this year as the quality of players making themselves available for the County Championship continues to improve, but we are very pleased with the final line-up."

"Squad flexibility was a key consideration particularly in the specialist roles of prop, hooker and INVOLVED: James Cleverly picked scrum-half. In the event of injury or illness we will not be able to fly replacements out so it was important to have experience across positions; props Jared Saunders and David Dickinson have played at hooker whilst hooker, Joe Bonner can switch to prop, and Jack Smales, a wing/full back, has played regularly at scrum-half.

"I am confident it will be a very rewarding and humbling experience for all involved as we make a positive impact on our East African hosts both on and off the pitch."

Edwards becomes part of MCC elite next to 'heroes'

KENT star Charlotte Edwards has broken new ground to become the first woman to join the MCC world cricket committee.

It tops a fantastic week for the England captain who was also awarded the prize of England Women's Cricketer of the Year.

She is one of four new members which includes Kent coach Jimmy Adams, former England captain Michael Vaughan, and former Australian wicketkeeper Rod Marsh.

MCC world cricket committee chairman Mike Brearley said: "MCC is privileged and very grateful to have these four eminent cricketers, each with such deep knowledge of the game, agree to join the MCC world cricket committee."

"I am sure that all four will have much to contribute, and I look forward to welcoming them in person at the next meeting at Lord's in August."

Edwards said: "I'm passionate about the game of cricket and feel I've got plenty to add to the discussion."

"It's incredibly exciting thinking about sitting around a table with EXCITED: Edwards happy with role some of my heroes, guys like Steve Waugh, who I grew up watching and learning from as a kid.

"It'll be an amazing experience just to pick these guys' brains and talk cricket with them."
